QUICK HITS

* - The Broncos lead the NFL with a +45 scoring differential in the fourth quarter through four games this season. See Page 5

* - In last week's 37-6 win against Oakland, Denver became just the seventh team since the 1970 NFL merger to win by 30+points without the benefit of a takeaway. See Page 8

* - Broncos Owner & CEO Pat Bowlen is in his 29th season as owner of the Broncos in 2012, and his club's 265 regular-season wins are tied for second in the NFL during his tenure. See Page 19

* - Executive Vice President of Football Operations John Elway has spearheaded the acquisitions of several key players, including the only four-time MVP in league history, QB Peyton Manning. See Page 20

* - Head Coach John Fox, who is in his second season with the Broncos in 2012, is tied for third among active NFL coaches with 89 overall victories since 2002. See Page 21

* - WR Eric Decker (24 rec.) and WR Demaryius Thomas (21 rec.) have combined for 45 receptions through four games to tie for the second-highest total among wide receiver duos in the NFL. See Page 11

* - DE Elvis Dumervil (9 QBH) and LB Von Miller (7 QBH) have combined for the second-most quarterback hits (16) in the NFL among pass rushing tandems through four games. See Page 15

* - K Matt Prater is the most accurate kicker in NFL history in the fourth quarter or overtime, having converted 31-of-32 attempts during those periods in his career. See Page 17

ALL SEVEN DRAFT PICKS MAKE ACTIVE ROSTER

For just the second time in Broncos history, every draft pick made Denver's 53-man roster out of training camp.

The only other season in which every draft choice made Denver's initial roster was in 2007 when the Broncos made just four selections.

Below is a look at Denver's seven selections in the 2012 NFL Draft:

DE Derek Wolfe (Rd. 2-36, Cincinnati) - Named Big East Conference Co-Defensive Player of the Year in 2011 and finished his career ranked fourth on the Bearcats' all-time list with 19.5 sacks.

QB Brock Osweiler (Rd. 2-52, Arizona State) - Left for the NFL after his junior campaign in which he became just the fourth player in Pacific-12 Conference history to throw for more than 4,000 yards in a season.

RB Ronnie Hillman (Rd. 3-67, San Diego State) - Played 26 career games (20 starts) and finished third in school history with 3,243 yards rushing in just two seasons with the Aztecs.

CB Omar Bolden (Rd. 4-101, Arizona State) - Started four years for the Sun Devils and totaled 138 career tackles, seven interceptions and 21 pass breakups before missing his senior campaign due to injury.

OL Philip Blake (Rd. 4-108, Baylor) - Opened all 38 games played in three seasons for the Bears after transferring from Tyler Junior College.

DT Malik Jackson (Rd. 5-137, Tennessee) - Played 46 games (24 starts) for USC (2008-09) and Tennessee (2010-11), capping his career by earning first-team All-Southeastern Conference honors with the Vols in 2011.

LB Danny Trevathan (Rd. 6-188, Kentucky) - Played all 52 possible games (31 starts) for Kentucky and led the Southeastern Conference in tackles during each of his final two campaigns.

BRONCOS FANS SET TRAINING CAMP ATTENDANCE MARK

The Denver Broncos' total 2012 training camp attendance was 84,380, establishing a new club record and nearly doubling the previous mark set last season (45,124).

Included in the totals were 43,076 fans who came to watch 15 practices at the team's training facility at Dove Valley. Additionally, a record crowd of 41,304 fans attended the Broncos' Summer Scrimmage at Sports Authority Field at Mile High on Aug. 4—the second-highest attendance total for a training camp practice in the NFL this year (Green Bay – 55,605, 8/3/12).

The Broncos attracted more than 4,000 fans to Dove Valley on five occasions, including a total of 5,034 fans on Aug. 2 that represented the largest crowd in the 10 seasons the club has held training camp at its training facility (2003-pres.). On six instances in 2012, the crowd total surpassed the previous record of 3,103 fans set on Aug. 1, 2010.

HALL OF FAME NOMINEES / OFFENSIVE NOTES

BRONCOS HALL OF FAME NOMINEES

Former Broncos C Tom Nalen and S John Lynch were among the 13 first-year eligible modern-era candidates nominated for the Pro Football Hall of Fame Class of 2013 on Sept. 27.

Several other former Broncos are eligible for the Hall of Fame, including S Steve Atwater, RB Terrell Davis, LB Karl Mecklenburg, S Dennis Smith, WR Rod Smith and Head Coach Dan Reeves.

Below are some notes on Denver's Hall of Fame nominees:

Steve Atwater – Selected to the fourth-most Pro Bowls (8) in NFL history among safeties, he intercepted at least one pass in each of his 10 seasons with the Broncos and finished with 24 in his career... Started 14 post-season contests for the Broncos, including four AFC Championship games and three Super Bowls.

Terrell Davis – The Broncos' all-time leading rusher (7,607 yds.), Davis rushed for at least 1,000 yards in each of his first four seasons, including the 1998 campaign in which he totaled the fourth-most rushing yards (2,008) in a season in NFL history to earn NFL MVP honors... Ranks third in league history in rushing yards per game (97.5) and posted 100 yards rushing in 7-of-8 career postseason games.

John Lynch – Earned nine Pro Bowl selections to rank second in NFL history among safeties... Joins Hall of Famer Rod Woodson as the only defensive backs in NFL history with nine Pro Bowls, 191 starts and a Super Bowl win.

Karl Mecklenburg – Voted to play in six Pro Bowls and helped Denver to seven postseason appearances, five division titles and three Super Bowl berths... Posted 100 tackles in a season six times, including a career-high 143 stops in 1989.

Tom Nalen – Earned five Pro Bowl selections and totaled the second-most starts (188) in team history... Joins Steelers Hall of Famer Mike Webster as the only centers in league history with five Pro Bowls, 188 starts and two Super Bowl wins.

Dan Reeves – Coached 12 seasons in Denver (1981-92) and led the team to six playoff berths, five division titles and three Super Bowl appearances... Joined by Hall of Famers Don Shula, Tom Landry and Chuck Noll as the only coaches in NFL history to post at least 190 regular-season wins and appear in at least four Super Bowls.

Dennis Smith – Selected to six Pro Bowls during his 14 years with Denver, he finished his career ranked third all-time in games played (184) by a Bronco and fifth in games started (170)... Posted 30 interceptions to rank fifth in team history (currently sixth).

Rod Smith – The franchise's all-time leading receiver, Smith was selected to three career Pro Bowls and posted the most receptions, yards and touchdowns by an undrafted player in league history... Hall of Famer Jerry Rice is the only player in NFL history to match his career totals: 898 receptions, 12,249 receiving yards, eight 1,000-yard receiving seasons, 77 receiving touchdowns, 126 overall wins and two Super Bowl victories.

BRONCOS OFFENSIVE NOTES

QUICKLY:

* - Mike McCoy is in his fourth season as Denver's offensive coordinator and his 11th year coaching offense under John Fox.

* - QB Peyton Manning, who was signed by the Broncos on March 21, 2012, is the league's only four-time MVP and the NFL's active leader in nearly every major passing category.

* - Manning owns the fourth-most regular-season wins (143) by a starting quarterback in NFL history, trailing only Brett Favre, John Elway and Dan Marino in that category.

* - Manning is just the third player in NFL history with 400 career passing touchdowns, reaching the milestone in Week 1 in his 209th game to become the fastest of the three players to No. 400.

* - Manning has orchestrated 46 game-winning drives in the fourth quarter or overtime to rank second in NFL history behind only Dan Marino (47).

* - Manning owns an NFL-record 65 games with 300-yards passing, overtaking Dan Marino in that category with his 330-yard effort in Week 3 against Houston.

* - Manning has surpassed 4,000 passing yards in a season an NFL-record 11 times during his career.

* - Denver finished with the league's No. 1 rushing offense in 2011 after totaling a franchise-best 2,632 yards on the ground.

* - Denver leads the NFL with 18 individual 100-yard rushers since 1995, totaling an NFL-best 135.7 rushing yards per game during that stretch.

- RB Willis McGahee leads all active NFL players with 32 career 100-yard rushing games.

* - McGahee, who totaled 1,000 rushing yards for the fourth time in his career in 2011, previously accomplished the feat with Buffalo (2004-05) and Baltimore (2007), joining Ricky Watters (S.F./Phi./Sea.) as the only two players in NFL history to record 1,000-yard rushing seasons with three different teams.

* - McGahee owns the third-most rushing yards (7,691) and rushing touchdowns (62) among active NFL players.

* - WR Eric Decker (24 rec.) and WR Demaryius Thomas (21 rec.) have combined for 45 receptions through four games to tie for the second-highest total among wide receiver duos in the NFL.

* - Decker's eight receiving touchdowns in 2011 represented the second most in franchise history by a rookie or second-year player.

* - WR Demaryius Thomas totaled 25 receptions for 448 yards (17.9 avg.) with three touchdowns in Denver's final five games in 2011 to mark the most receiving yards in team history during the last month of a season.

* - Thomas set a franchise record by leading the team in receiving yards during the Broncos' final seven games of the 2011 campaign.

* - TE Joel Dreessen ranks third in the NFL in percentage of catches resulting in touchdowns (16.9% / 12-of-71) since 2010 (min. 25 rec.).

* - TE Jacob Tamme recorded a career-high 67 catches in 2010—all in the last 10 games with quarterback Peyton Manning—to lead the NFL during that stretch after starting tight end Dallas Clark was placed on injured reserve.

* - T Ryan Clady has started 68 consecutive games to begin his career as one of just three players from his 2008 draft class to accomplish that feat.

* - C Dan Koppen ranks first among offensive linemen in NFL history (min. 100 GP) with a winning percentage of .782 (97-27).

GRONKOWSKI BROTHERS IN THE NFL

Broncos fullback Chris Gronkowski, who was acquired by Denver in a trade with Indianapolis on May 23, 2012, has two brothers who competed in NFL training camps this year: tight ends Rob Gronkowski (New England) and Dan Gronkowski (Cleveland).

Dan Gronkowski was waived by Cleveland on Aug. 31, but the three brothers were all on active rosters at the same time during the last two seasons.

According to the Pro Football Hall of Fame, the Gronkowskis are one of nine families in professional football history to have at least three brothers playing at the same time. They are the first trio of brothers in the NFL together since the Baldingers (Brian, Gary, Rich) in 1992.

DEFENSIVE NOTES

BRONCOS DEFENSIVE NOTES

QUICKLY:

* - Jack Del Rio is in his first season as the Broncos' defensive coordinator after spending the previous nine seasons as head coach for the Jacksonville Jaguars.

* - Del Rio spent the 2002 season as Head Coach John Fox's defensive coordinator in Carolina, where he inherited the NFL's worst defense statistically and turned it into the league's No.2-ranked unit.

* - CB Champ Bailey played in his 11th Pro Bowl in 2011 to tie for the third-most in NFL history.

* - Bailey's 32 interceptions rank fifth in the NFL since he joined the Broncos in 2004. His 50 career interceptions rank first among all active NFL cornerbacks and are third among all players since entering the league in 1999.

* - CB Tracy Porter has totaled three career game-sealing interceptions returned for touchdowns with all three of those plays occurring with less than 3:30 remaining in the fourth quarter and his team leading by one score or less.

* - CB Chris Harris led all NFL rookie defensive backs with 65 tackles in 2011 after joining the club as a college free agent.

* - DE Elvis Dumervil, who led the NFL in sacks (17) in 2009, returned to the Broncos defense in 2011 after missing the entire 2010 campaign with a pectoral injury suffered during training camp.

* - Dumervil ranks fourth in the NFL since 2006 in sacks per game (.70) and owns the third-most multiple-sack games (18) in the league since his rookie season in 2006.

* - DE Elvis Dumervil (9 QBH) and LB Von Miller (7 QBH) have combined for the second-most quarterback hits (16) in the NFL among pass rushing tandems through four games.

* - Miller was named NFL Defensive Rookie of the Year by the Associated Press after setting a Broncos rookie record with 11.5 sacks.

* - Miller tied for third in the AFC with his 11.5 sacks (77 yds.) in 2011—a total that ranked second among all league rookies. His total is also tied for the most by a rookie in franchise history.

* - LB Keith Brooking has played 180 consecutive games to tie for the second-longest streak among active NFL players.

* - DE Derek Wolfe recorded his first career sack in Week 1 against Pittsburgh to become just the sixth rookie in Broncos history (since sacks became an official statistic in 1982) to record a sack in the club's regular-season opener.

BAILEY AN 11-TIME PRO BOWL SELECTION

Broncos cornerback Champ Bailey played in his 11th Pro Bowl following the 2011 season to tie for the third-most in NFL history.

Bailey was a four-time Pro Bowl selection (2000-03) with Washington before earning seven Pro Bowls with the Broncos (2004-07, 2009-11). He also is a four-time Associated Press All-Pro, earning first-team honors three times from 2004-06 and adding second-team accolades in 2007.

COLQUITT A HOUSEHOLD NFL NAME

Denver's Britton Colquitt and Kansas City's Dustin Colquitt are the first brothers to punt in the NFL at the same time since 1941 (George and Wes McAfee).

The Colquitt family has produced four NFL punters, including Britton and Dustin's father, Craig, and uncle, Jimmy. Craig Colquitt won two Super Bowl rings as the Steelers' punter and Jimmy Colquitt played two games for the Seahawks in 1985. All four Colquitts attended the University of Tennessee.

BRONCOS MISCELLANEOUS NOTES

QUICKLY:

* - Now in their sixth decade of professional football, the Broncos are one of just four teams to record three 90+ win decades since 1960 and the only organization to do so in each of the last three decades.

* - The Broncos' 313-game scoring streak in the regular season is the longest active streak in the NFL (dates back to 1992) and ranks second all time in league annals.

* - Owner/CEO Pat Bowlen is in his 29th season as owner of the Broncos in 2012, and his club's 265 regular-season wins are tied for second in the NFL during his tenure.

* - The Broncos' five Super Bowl appearances under Bowlen are the second most in the NFL since he purchased the team in 1984.

* - The Broncos are tied for the NFL's best overall home record (222-87 / .718) since 1975 and have posted a league-best five undefeated home schedules in the 16-game regular-season era (since 1978).

DECADES OF SUCCESS

The Broncos are in their sixth decade of professional football, looking to build off a body of work that ranks as the most consistent in the NFL in terms of winning over the last three decades.

Denver is one of just four teams to record three 90+ win decades since 1960 and the only organization to do so in each of the last three decades.

Below is a look at the Broncos' record by the decade. In its 50-plus seasons of football, Denver has totaled the ninth-most regular-season wins (408 / 408-374-10) in the NFL and advanced to the postseason 18 times.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES

HOME SELLOUT STREAK

The Broncos have sold out every home game since the beginning of the 1970 season with the exception of two replacement games played during the 1987 strike (both games were sold out before the strike).

Denver has thus sold out 328 consecutive regular-season games, which marks the second-longest home sellout streak in the NFL. With postseason games factored in, the total reaches 344.

ELWAY MAKES HIS MARK ON ROSTER

John Elway enters his second season with the club in his current role as Executive Vice President of Football Operations.

In addition to upgrading the roster with key veteran acquisitions such as quarterback Peyton Manning and running back Willis McGahee, Elway signed 11-time Pro Bowl cornerback Champ Bailey to an extension in 2011.

Of the 16 draft picks made by the Broncos the last two seasons, 15 of those players are currently with the team. Additionally, four college free agents during the last two years are on Denver's active roster.

Below is a look at the free agent starters signed the last two offseasons:

NT Justin Bannan - The 11th-year veteran has missed just two regular-season games over the last five years, combining to play 82 games (52 starts) during that span.

SS Mike Adams - Listed as Denver's starting strong safety, he posted three interceptions with Cleveland last year on the league's No. 2 ranked pass defense.

TE Joel Dreessen - Started at least 10 games in each of the last three seasons and owns 11 receiving touchdowns over that stretch.

QB Peyton Manning - The only four-time MVP in league history signed with Denver on March 21.

RB Willis McGahee - Posted his fourth career 1,000-yard rushing season and was named to his second Pro Bowl after helping the club lead the NFL with a team-record 2,632 yards on the ground.

CB Tracy Porter - Opened 39-of-43 games in his first four NFL seasons with New Orleans in addition to starting six postseason contests for the Saints.

(*—the second number is the percentage the quarterback has put his team in position to score, allowing for missed field goals and subtracting those drives ended by the clock and replaced due to injury. Quarterbacks who leave the game during a drive only get a replacement credit if team goes on to earn at least one first down. Blocked punts for safeties counted as drive ended by punt; —does not include plays when not at helm or not truly setting a play in motion, i.e., muffed punts/kneel downs/spiked balls: Manning 5-for-[5]; Osweiler 1-[1]; Opponents 3-for-[3].)

CORNERBACK

BAILEY AT A GLANCE:

- A 14th-year player and ninth-year Bronco whose 11 career Pro Bowl selections are the most by a cornerback in NFL history and are tied for third in league annals among all positions.
- Named to the NFL's All-Decade Team for the 2000s as chosen by the Pro Football Hall of Fame Selection Committee.
- Earned Associated Press All-Pro and Pro Bowl honors during each of his first four seasons in Denver from 2004-07 after spending five years with Washington to begin his NFL career.
- Tied for third in franchise history in Pro Bowl selections (7) and ranks fifth in club annals with 32 interceptions as a Bronco.
- Leads all NFL pure cornerbacks (3rd among all players) with 50 interceptions since his rookie year in 1999 while placing fifth in the league with 32 interceptions since joining the Broncos in 2004.
- Began his NFL career starting 99 consecutive regular-season games and has totaled the second-most starts (197) among league cornerbacks since his rookie year in 1999.
- Entering 2012, he was penalized for pass interference only three times during the last six years in the 426 times he was targeted (0.07%) according to Stats Inc.
- Recorded 18 interceptions with Denver from 2005-06, marking the most by an NFL player in a two-year stretch since Everson Walls had 18 interceptions for Dallas from 1981-82.
- Tied for the NFL lead in 2006 with a career-best 10 interceptions, which marked the second-highest single-season total in Denver history and propelled him to a second-place finish in the Associated Press' NFL Defensive Player of the Year voting.
- Turned in one of the most dramatic plays in NFL postseason annals when he returned an interception 100 yards in an AFC Divisional Playoff Game against New England (1/14/06), marking the longest non-scoring interception return in league playoff history.
- Became the youngest player in NFL history to post three interceptions in a game as a rookie with the Redskins (at Arizona, 10/17/99).
- Won the 1998 Bronko Nagurski Award at the University of Georgia as the nation's top defensive player while also earning consensus All-America honors that year.
- Joined the Broncos on March 4, 2004, in a trade with Washington that brought Bailey and a second-round draft choice (RB Tatum Bell) to Denver in exchange for running back Clinton Portis.
- Selected by Washington in the first round (7th overall) of the 1999 NFL Draft.

- Owns five 100-tackle seasons, including a personal-best 170 stops in 2007, along with 30 10-tackle games for his career, while ranking sixth in the NFL in tackles (565) in the last five seasons according to press box totals.
- Led the Broncos in tackles the last three seasons and five times overall in his eight years in the league.
- Joined by James Farrior (Pit.) as the only two players with at least 800 tackles and 20 sacks since he entered the league in 2004 (press box totals).
- Started for the Broncos at weakside linebacker in 2004, '08 and '11, strongside linebacker from 2005-06, middle linebacker in '07 and inside linebacker from 2009-10.
- Finished the 2010 season as the only player in the NFL to lead his team in tackles (119) and sacks (5.5) with the latter figure representing a career high.
- Named a Pro Bowl alternate in 2009 after starting all 16 games and ranking sixth in the AFC with a team-high 122 tackles (100 solo), including 3.5 sacks, at inside linebacker.
- Did not miss a regular-season game or a playoff contest in his first four seasons (2004-07) with Denver as its only defender to see time in all 67 Broncos contests during that period.
- Became the first rookie in Broncos history to lead the club in tackles with 114 stops in 2004 en route to finishing third in Associated Press NFL Defensive Rookie of the Year voting and earning Pro Football Weekly/PFWA All-Rookie honors that season.
- Chosen twice (2002-03) as a Butkus Award semifinalist at the University of Miami, where he was a two-time first-team All-Big East Conference choice who helped the Hurricanes to a national championship victory as a sophomore.
- Selected by the Broncos in the first round (17th overall) of the 2004 NFL Draft.

CAREER TRANSACTIONS: Signed by Denver as a draft choice 7/28/04.

2011: Williams started all 13 regular-season games played and led the team in tackles (90) for the third consecutive year and fifth time in his eight NFL seasons... Added five sacks (38 yds.), two passes defensed, three forced fumbles and one fumble recovery... Opened both postseason contests for Denver and totaled 13 tackles (6 solo) and two passes defensed... Missed the first three games of the season with an elbow injury... Recorded a strip-sack of quarterback Matt Moore in overtime at Mia. (10/23) to prevent a game-winning score and set up the Bronco for their go-ahead drive... Tied his career high with two sacks (16 yds.) vs. Chi. (12/11) and was credited with herding Bears running back Marion Barber out of bounds with less than two minutes left in regulation to give Denver's offense time to drive for the game-tying field goal.

2010: Williams played all 16 games (15 starts) at inside linebacker and posted 119 tackles (94 solo), including a career-high 5.5 sacks (28.5 yds.), to go along with nine passes defensed, one forced fumble and one fumble recovery... Represented the only player in the NFL to lead his team in tackles and sacks... Joined just three other players in the league with at least 100 tackles and five sacks... Registered a career-high two sacks (9 yds.) vs. S.D. (1/2).

2009: Williams, a team captain, started all 16 games for the Broncos at inside linebacker, totaling 122 tackles (100 solo), 3.5 sacks (25 yds.), seven pass breakups, three forced fumbles and two fumble recoveries... Named a Pro Bowl alternate... Ranked sixth in the AFC (11th in NFL) in tackles while posting career highs in sacks and pass breakups... Helped Denver rank seventh in the league defensively in both yards per play (5.0) and yards per game (315.0)... Had four 10-tackle games, including a season-high 11 stops at Bal. (11/1).

2008: Williams, a team captain, returned to the weakside linebacker position for the first time since his rookie season and played 11 games (all starts) for Denver, finishing second on the team with 103 tackles (83 solo)... Notched 2.5 sacks (13 yds.), one pass breakup and one fumble recovery... Ranked sixth in the NFL in tackles per game (8.5 / 93 total) according to press box statistics... Started Denver's first eight games, recording double-digit tackle totals in five of those contests, before suffering a left knee injury vs. Mia. (11/2) and missing the next five games (Games 9-13)... Tied for the NFL lead in tackles (77) at the time of the injury according to press box totals... Had a career-high 17 tackles (15 solo) vs. N.O. (9/21)... Earned ESPN.com's AFC West Player of the Week honors after registering a team-high 16 tackles (13 solo) vs. T.B. (10/5).

2007: Williams, in his first season playing middle linebacker, started all 16 games for the first time in his career and led the Broncos with a career-high 170 tackles (121 solo)... Added one sack (14 yds.), one interception (0 yds.), four pass breakups, three forced fumbles (second most on the team) and two fumble recoveries... Posted at least a share of Denver's tackle lead in 11 games... Registered the highest tackle total (170) by a Bronco since 2002 (LB Al Wilson, 199)... Credited with an AFC-best 141 tackles (106 solo) according to press box figures with that total ranking second in the NFL... Had 10 games with at least 10 tackles... Whistled for only one penalty (5 yds.) all season.

2006: Williams posted 86 tackles (69 solo), one sack (8 yds.), three pass breakups and two forced fumbles in 16 games (15 starts) for the Broncos... Played at the strongside position... Made a season-high 10 tackles (7 solo) and broke up two passes on Sunday Night Football at N.E. (9/24).

2005: Williams placed sixth on the Broncos with 68 tackles (44 solo) while adding five pass breakups and one forced fumble in 16 games (14 starts) at strongside linebacker... Key part of a Denver team that won the AFC West title and advanced to the AFC Championship Game... Helped the club rank second in the NFL against the run (85.2 ypg.) and tie for third in the league in scoring defense (16.1 ppg.)... Contributed two tackles and one forced fumble on special teams... Placed second on the club with 17 tackles (10 solo) while adding half a sack (3.5 yds.) in two playoff games, including 10 stops (5 solo) and half a sack in the AFC Championship Game vs. Pit. (1/22).

2004: Selected by the Broncos in the first round (17th overall) of the 2004 NFL Draft, Williams played 16 games (14 starts) at weakside linebacker and totaled 114 tackles (82 solo), two sacks (13 yds.), one interception (10 yds.), nine pass breakups and one forced fumble... Finished third in the Associated Press' NFL Defensive Rookie of the Year voting and received Pro Football Weekly/PFWA All-Rookie recognition... Became the first Broncos rookie in club history to own the team's outright lead in tackles for the season... Ranked fifth on the club with eight special-teams tackles... Recorded seven tackles (5 solo) in an AFC Wild Card Game at Ind. (1/9)... Was the only rookie in the league to receive AFC Defensive Player of the Week accolades (Wk. 16 at Tennessee) and also earned NFL Defensive Rookie of the Month honors for December, becoming the first Bronco in club history to receive that honor.

COLLEGE: Williams was a three-year starter at the University of Miami, playing 47 career games (34 starts) and totaling 241 tackles (124 solo), 10 sacks (58 yds.), 28 tackles for a loss (92 yds.), four forced fumbles, one fumble recovery and 10 pass breakups... Started his collegiate career at fullback and totaled 18 career rushes for 142 yards (7.9 avg.) with two touchdowns while catching 12 passes for 153 yards (11.9 avg.)... Blossomed into one of the best players in the country at linebacker, finishing his senior year in 2003 as a semifinalist for the Butkus Award (nation's top linebacker) for the second consecutive year and earning a selection to the All-America Dream Team (The NFL Draft Report)... Named third-team All-America by the Associated Press and first-team All-Big East Conference as a senior... Was a semifinalist for the Butkus Award and a first-team All-Big East selection as a junior... Helped Miami capture the national championship as a sophomore with a Rose Bowl win against Nebraska... Played as a reserve fullback in 2000 during his freshman campaign before switching to linebacker.

PERSONAL: Williams earned USA Today Defensive Player of the Year honors and was regarded as the top defensive player in the nation at De La Salle High School (Concord, Calif.), one of the top prep programs in the country... Denver 31, Pittsburgh 19

Sunday, Sept. 9, 2012 • 6:31 p.m. MDT • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver

WEATHER: Sunny, 85°, Wind NE 10 mph • TIME: 3:08 • ATTENDANCE: 76,823

Quarterback Peyton Manning capped his Broncos regular-season debut by delivering a comeback win for the club in a 31-19 win against the Pittsburgh Steelers in the 2012 season opener before a sellout crowd of 76,823 at Sports Authority Field at Mile High.

In his first game after sitting out the 2011 season due to injury, Manning became just the third player in NFL history to reach 400 passing touchdowns, completing 19-of-26 attempts (73.1%) for 253 yards and two touchdowns on the evening.

Manning's historic touchdown came on a 71-yard pass to wide receiver Demaryius Thomas, evoking fond memories for Denver fans eight months after Thomas stiff-armed through the Pittsburgh defense in January to give the Broncos a win in an AFC Wild Card playoff game.

The first quarter was quiet offensively as Denver held the Steelers scoreless, matching a Pittsburgh defense that finished the 2011 season ranked No. 1 overall in the NFL.

The Steelers got on the board first after a 23-yard punt return by Antonio Brown allowed them to begin the second quarter deep in Denver territory. Their 10-play drive culminated with a Shaun Suisham field goal.

Following Pittsburgh's score, Manning led the Broncos back for an 80-yard touchdown drive, which running back Knowshon Moreno capped with a 7-yard run. Over the final five minutes of the half, quarterback Ben Roethlisberger marched the Steelers 79 yards and connected with tight end Heath Miller to give Pittsburgh a 10-7 edge at the break.

Denver's offense ran only two plays in the third quarter as Pittsburgh had possession of the ball for more than 14 minutes in the frame. The Steelers ran 16 plays on their opening drive of the second half, and Suisham finished it off with a 35-yard field goal.

The Broncos responded quickly as Manning hit wide receiver Eric Decker for a 9-yard pass before hooking up with Thomas for the milestone score, putting Denver up 14-13.

Roethlisberger took the Steelers 80 yards late in the third quarter, and finished the drive early in the fourth with a 3-yard toss to wide receiver Mike Wallace. Pittsburgh's two-point conversion attempt failed and the Steelers led 19-14.

It was all Broncos from there, as Denver put up 17 unanswered points to seal the win. Manning matched Roethlisberger with an 80-yard drive of his own, connecting with tight end Jacob Tamme for a 1-yard score.

After Prater made a 26-yard field goal on Denver's next drive, cornerback Tracy Porter electrified the home crowd with a 43-yard interception return for a touchdown, providing the final margin in Denver's 31-19 victory.

Atlanta 27, Denver 21

Monday, Sept. 17, 2012 • 8:41 p.m. EDT • Georgia Dome • Atlanta

WEATHER: Indoors • TIME: 3:27 • ATTENDANCE: 70,427

The Denver Broncos mounted a fourth-quarter rally on the road, but four early turnovers proved too much to overcome as Denver lost to the Atlanta Falcons, 27-21, in front of a crowd of 70,427 at the Georgia Dome and a national Monday Night Football television audience.

The primetime showdown featured a quarterback matchup contrasting youth and experience. Denver's Peyton Manning, playing in his second regular-season game with the Broncos, found his groove during the final three quarters, but Atlanta's Matt Ryan displayed consistent form and kept his team ahead throughout the night.

Running back Willis McGahee shined for the Broncos, grinding out 113 yards on 22 carries for an impressive average of 5.1 yards per attempt while finding the end zone twice in the final quarter.

Manning, who came into the game with a 78-33 career record in domes, threw interceptions on each of Denver's first three drives. Atlanta converted two of the takeaways into points, grabbing a 10-0 lead after the first quarter.

Ryan directed scoring drives on the Falcons' first two drives of the second frame, including a 1-yard touchdown pass to tight end Tony Gonzalez, which extended Atlanta's lead to 20-0.

Manning got one more chance to get his team on the scoreboard before halftime, and this time, he capitalized. Covering 80 yards in 13 plays, Manning ended the half with a scoring strike to Georgia native and former Georgia Tech Yellowjacket Demaryius Thomas. The touchdown was originally ruled incomplete before a review reversed the call.

The squads traded scoreless drives to start the second half, before Ryan found go-to receiver Roddy White for a 4-yard strike, finishing a 64-yard series and increasing the Falcons' advantage to 27-7 as the game moved to the fourth quarter.

In the final frame, Manning and McGahee combined to nearly complete Denver's comeback. The quarterback executed an 88-yard drive to start the fourth, and his veteran tailback finished it with a 2-yard scamper to cut Atlanta's lead to 13.

Following three uneventful series by both teams, Denver wide receiver Eric Decker returned a punt near midfield and Manning capitalized on the good field position. The Broncos covered 45 yards in less than three minutes, and McGahee's 2-yard run made it a one-possession game, 27-21.

Denver would get no closer, however, as Ryan and the Falcons offense converted a key third down on their next possession to help run out the clock and hand the Broncos their first loss of the 2012 season.

BRONCOS DEFENSIVE STATISTICS

Houston 31, Denver 25
 Sunday, Sept. 23, 2012 • 2:25 p.m. MDT • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver
 WEATHER: Partly Sunny, 84°, Wind NW 13 mph • TIME: 3:27 • ATTENDANCE: 76,566

For the second time in six days, the Denver Broncos mounted a fourth-quarter comeback, only to fall short against a reigning division champion as they lost to the Houston Texans 31-25 before a sellout crowd of 76,566 at Sports Authority Field at Mile High.

Quarterback Peyton Manning crossed the 300-yard passing threshold for the first time as a Bronco and for an NFL-record 64th time in his career while connecting on 26-of-52 passes and throwing touchdown strikes to wide receiver Brandon Stokley and tight end Joel Dreessen.

Denver's ground game was unable to make a dent in Houston's defense, which came into the game as the NFL's stingiest against the run. The Texans, meanwhile, produced 152 yards on the ground behind running back Arian Foster's 105-yard effort, and quarterback Matt Schaub threw for 290 yards with scoring passes to four different receivers to earn his second win in four head-to-head matchups with Manning.

The Broncos got their first points of the afternoon on defense, as defensive end Elvis Dumervil sacked Schaub in the end zone for a safety on Houston's first possession. Matt Prater then extended Denver's lead to 5-0 with a 32-yard field goal.

Houston erased the Broncos' advantage quickly, as Schaub connected with top target Andre Johnson for a 60-yard score on the third play of the Texans' next drive. The visitors took a 7-5 lead into the second quarter.

Schaub continued his accurate passing in the second frame, hitting Foster for a 3-yard touchdown and wideout Kevin Walter for a 52-yard score, increasing Houston's lead to 16.

Broncos kicker Matt Prater cut the halftime margin to 13 on field goals from 23 and 53 yards out—the second of which was set up by linebacker Wesley Woodyard's interception with 46 seconds remaining in the second quarter.

A Shayne Graham field goal and Schaub's fourth touchdown pass of the day—this one to tight end Owen Daniels—propelled Houston to a 20-point lead entering the fourth quarter.

Like they did the previous week in Atlanta, Manning and the Broncos stormed back in the final frame. After Denver's defense forced a fumble, Manning connected with longtime teammate Brandon Stokley for a 38-yard touchdown, pulling the Broncos within two possessions of Houston at 31-18.

Denver forced a three-and-out before Manning took the Broncos 74 yards in 16 plays. He hit tight end and former Texan Joel Dreessen for a 6-yard touchdown, trimming the deficit to six with three minutes remaining in the game.

The Texans' ground game whittled the clock down to 20 seconds before the Broncos got a final shot to score. Needing to cover 70 yards on the final play, a completion and a series of laterals proved unsuccessful for Denver, who fell to the Texans by the final score of 31-25.

The Shutdown Corner Interview: John Elway

Doug Farrar
Shutdown Corner
September 15, 2012

In the Pantheon of great NFL quarterbacks, John Elway's name is always going to come up on the short list. From 1983 through 1998 for the Denver Broncos, Elway defined a team and a town as few players ever have. Now, as the team's executive vice president of football operations, Elway was able to bring Peyton Manning, another member of that Pantheon, to the Mile High City in hope that more Lombardi Trophies could be won by Elway's favorite team.

So far, so good -- Manning looked masterful in the Broncos' 31-19 opening win over the Pittsburgh Steelers, completing 19 of 26 passes for 235 yards and two touchdowns. Manning, never known as the most mobile of quarterbacks, even ran for a first down on a seven-yard play -- perhaps Manning's tribute to his formerly more mobile new boss.

We recently spoke to Elway about his longtime team, his new quarterback, and his involvement in Dove's "Journey to Comfort" campaign.

Shutdown Corner: It was obviously a big triumph for your team, the opening-week win over the Pittsburgh Steelers, and Peyton Manning playing the way he did. I spoke with his dad this week, and we discussed the struggle Peyton went through to come back. You persevered a lot through your career -- the Super Bowl losses, the feud with Dan Reeves -- so you're a survivor. You've been through it. What were your impressions, watching Manning, knowing what he went through, and then seeing him play like that?

John Elway: Yeah, no question. I was just so proud, not only of Peyton, but the whole football team. To be dead-honest with you, knowing what I knew about Peyton, and the time I'd spent with him before he came here and just knowing what kind of guy he is -- that's what gave me so much confidence. The fact that he wanted to come back and play football, and play football well ... anytime you challenge a guy like Peyton Manning, you know he's going to succeed. Because he has that willpower and the will to work.

I felt that when he was released by Indianapolis -- it's still surprising that he was released, though I understand -- it also put a chip on his shoulder. Not that he needed to work even harder, but he really wanted to prove that it wasn't the right move. So, whenever you challenge a guy with the ability and the work ethic that Peyton has, you're going to see good things come out of it.

SC: From a quarterback perspective, are there things he can do that you couldn't? How are you different?

JE: You know, I think we just had different styles. His game is probably a bit more cerebral than my game was, especially early in my career. The older I got, the more cerebral I became -- you lose some of your athletic ability. I was more a mover and a scrambler, and he's more of a pocket guy. But I think the mentality, as far as a quarterback's concerned -- no matter how you get it done, it's your competitive nature and how bad you want to win. I think we're very similar there.

SC: There's a new guy in the NFL out of Stanford, your alma mater -- Andrew Luck. You've most likely heard of him. What are your thoughts on his overall makeup and skillset?

JE: I think he's going to have a great career. He had it all coming out of college -- not only the physical side, but the maturity on the mental side. He's smart, he ran that whole offense at Stanford under [Jim] Harbaugh, and I think he's going to have a tremendous career. He's going to get better with each start, and he's going to get better as his team gets better around him.

SC: Mike Shanahan, one of the guys most crucial in your development, now has a new quarterback in Robert Griffin III. I've seen Shanahan offenses with mobile quarterbacks like you and Jake Plummer, but the system he's set up for Griffin might be the most diverse he's ever done. What were your thoughts about that first game?

JE: That's where Mike is so good -- Xs-and-Os-wise, offensively, I don't know that there's anyone better. He did a tremendous job with a rookie quarterback going into that first game, and how the Redskins brought RGIII through the preseason. Starting him in that first game against New Orleans, they did a great job of putting him in situations that quarterbacks can handle. They did a great job of keeping him in things he was comfortable with, they didn't make him make plays that were difficult for any quarterback, and they created situations in which he was able to flourish. A lot of those quick screens, together with the read option they ran to take advantage of Robert's mobility, they did a tremendous job with the game plan. And then, with Robert playing the way he did, I thought it was great.

SC: It was a bit similar to the way [Denver Broncos offensive coordinator] Mike McCoy handled Tim Tebow when he started mid-season for your team last year. You don't force an NFL game plan on a system college quarterback -- you merge your concepts with what he does well. The Panthers did the same thing with Cam Newton. It seems that there's a greater understanding of the need to meet those quarterbacks halfway.

JE: To me, it's a sign of a great football coach. They can adjust what they do to get the most out of anyone playing any position. In that case, as you said, with the quarterback position, what McCoy did last year with Tim in adjusting the offense to what Tim was best at -- same thing at Carolina with Cam. To be able to get the most out of an athlete, you do have to meet him halfway. What they did with Cam, and what we did with Tim, it's a compliment to those coaches.

SC: Your current position in running the Denver Broncos -- you don't need to do this. You're obviously doing it because you love football, and it's certainly not ceremonial. What is your day-to-day? Take me through what John Elway does every day at Dove Valley.

JE: I'm in charge of football operations, so I oversee all decisions on the football side. I'm heavily involved in personnel -- once we get involved in the season, with the draft and free agency, I make the final decisions on all those things. [Head coach] John [Fox] runs the football team on the field, and I'm here to try and supplement that team the best I can. To give us the best 53 guys during the season, and then we go into the offseason and improve the team through free agency and the draft. So, I'm really most involved on the personnel side. But then again, I'm responsible for anything on the football operations side.

SC: John Fox obviously has a great deal of experience and success as a head coach -- what is your relationship like? What does he bring to the organization?

JE: Number one, he brings great experience. Number two, his ability to motivate these guys -- he has an unreal knack, having spent a year-and-a-half around him, to get these guys playing hard. He allows his coaches to coach, and he really focuses on getting the most out of his players. He has a relationship with the players where we can, week in and week out ... they play hard. That's one of the hardest things to do in this league; to get that consistency out of the players. And that's his strong point.

SC: You father, Jack Elway, was obviously a football lifer as a coach. Do you see yourself doing this when you're 70?

JE: I don't know -- I'm enjoying it at this point in time, and I'm happy with the progress we've made. 70 years old? Probably not. I signed a four-year deal, so I know I'll finish that. As we get closer to it, we'll see where we are, and whether I'll continue after that. But I really am enjoying what I'm doing, and I really am working with a lot of good guys here. The longer I'm in it -- and it will be two years in January -- it seems to be more fun in that more time is spent on football, rather than learning all the systems within the organization and the league. I'm enjoying it more and more all the time.

SC: Which quarterback playing today reminds you most of you?

JE: Ben Roethlisberger. I wasn't really his size -- he's a really big guy, but after watching him play last week, he did a tremendous job of buying time and making plays on third-and-long situations. I think he's probably the one who most resembles the way I used to play. That's the way I look at it.

SC: About the involvement with Dove -- the commercials were great, especially the one about your walk. Do you get a lot of people imitating that?

JE: The two guys I can think of the most is ... Brett Favre did it all the time, and he was actually pretty good at it, and Jim Harbaugh also did it all the time. I went down to the Orange Bowl a couple years ago, and [Harbaugh] had to show me how he could do my walk. So, yeah -- it came around quite a bit as we talked about it in the commercial.

SC: Jeff Fisher has attributed his football success to the power of his mustache, and it made me wonder if every successful individual in the NFL has that one totem. Would you attribute some or all of your great football feats to your unique walk?

JE: [Laughs] I'm not so sure, but you know, I've walked that way my whole life, so there's no question it had something to do with it.

SC: Could be something with the throwing mechanics -- it allowed you to do things nobody else could.

JE: That's right -- it had to tie in somewhere. Maybe it gave me the football body to help me stay healthy for 16 years.

SC: I can't let you go without asking you a Tebow question -- I think it's in my contract. Do you think he can succeed in the NFL as a pure quarterback, without all the systemic crutches in place to sort of prop him up?

JE: I'm not going to answer that question, because I don't know. I think that when you look at what we used him for, he was very successful. He's a competitor, and he's still young. So, being in the right situation, Tim Tebow's going to be able to help a football team.

Paige: Broncos coach Fox wants winner for next ring

By Woody Paige
The Denver Post
February 1, 2011

John Fox didn't come to Denver because he loves snow, subzero temperatures and Casa Bonita.

Fox didn't need money; he made $6.5 million last year. He wouldn't have been out of work long; the Eagles offered him a job. Fox didn't believe he had to prove anything to anyone else; he had turned the Panthers around three times.

He became the Broncos' head coach for one reason.

In early 1978, as the Broncos were gearing for their first Super Bowl, Fox was hired by the legendary Sid Gillman as defensive backs coach at United States International University, a small San Diego liberal-arts school playing big-time Division I football.

"A couple of other new assistants had been with another college that lost its bowl. They just got their rings and were showing them off when Coach Gillman walked in the room," Fox told me. "He looked at the rings and said, 'You got these for getting your (rears) kicked, and you're proud of them?' Then he stomped out. I've never forgotten that."

Fox has two Super Bowl rings — one for being an assistant on the losing Giants in XXXV and the other for being the head coach on the losing Panthers in XXXVIII.

He doesn't wear, or look at, either.

"I came back to get a winning ring. It's why I do this."

In the week leading up to Super Bowl XLV, Fox is well aware that his seventh NFL stop likely will be his last chance at winning a ring. His bosses, Pat Bowlen and John Elway, each own two NFL championship rings (and three loser's rings).

Elway and Bowlen celebrated their last Super Bowl on Jan. 31, 1999. Fox is hounded by his loss on Feb. 1, 2004.

If this amalgamation of Bowlen, Elway & Fox doesn't result in a Super Bowl in the next four seasons, they may all move on to the beach. In 2015 Bowlen will be 71,

Fox 60 and Elway 55. Bowlen has a home in Hawaii, Elway one near Los Angeles, and Fox was a beach bum in San Diego in high school and at San Diego State.

"I'm not ready to retire to sitting on the beach," Fox said.

After his collegiate playing career ended in 1977, Fox spent the next season with the Aztecs as a graduate assistant and earned his teaching certificate. His goal was to be a high school football coach. But his career took an odd turn when USIU decided to upgrade its football program, and the university president suggested, on a lark, that the athletic director call Gillman, the former coach of the San Diego Chargers. Gillman and Paul Brown have been termed the "fathers of modern pro football."

Gillman, who lived in the San Diego area, agreed to end his short-lived retirement and take over the Globe Runners. He hired a young staff that included Fox and two other assistants who ended up in the NFL, and a fourth eventually was named a major-college head coach.

"The most important thing Coach Gillman taught me was simplifying the terminology," Fox said.

The minimizing of memorization made the system easier for players to understand in practice and execute in games. "I still use that terminology," Fox says.

Fox was straight out of the Gillman coaching tree that branched throughout pro football. Al Davis coached under Gillman with the Chargers (and later hired Fox as his coordinator). Among those who coached or studied with Gillman (who early on served as an assistant with Vince Lombardi) were Bum Phillips, Chuck Noll, Paul Dietzel, Jack Faulkner (the Broncos' second coach), Ara Parseghian and Bo Schembechler.

Yet, Fox spent only four months with Gillman, who left abruptly to become Dick Vermeil's offensive coordinator with the Eagles. Tom Walsh was elevated at USIU (which had only 1,500 undergraduates), and the Globe Runners finished 8-3.

Since then, USIU has dropped football and even dropped its name (it's now Alliant International University).

Fox departed after a year and continued on a coach's odyssey at six other colleges, one United States Football League team and five NFL teams. He was named the Panthers' head coach in 2002.

The late Gillman, a pass-offense genius, and Fox, a run-oriented coach, disagreed about a critical offensive strategy.

Gillman felt that running the football was an unnecessary nuisance. "He would tell us that in any situation, if he had to choose between his worst pass play and his best run play, he'd call the pass.

"I'm the opposite. I'd rather use my worst run play than my best pass play."

Gillman would be bored.

The Panthers' run-pass yardage NFL rankings for Fox's nine seasons: 2002, 25-30; 2003, 7-18; 2004, 28-9; 2005, 19-17; 2006, 24-15; 2007, 14-29; 2008, 3-19; 2009, 3-27; 2010, 13-32.

This season the Packers were ranked 24-5, the Steelers 11-14. On overall defense, Pittsburgh was second, Green Bay fifth.

With the Broncos, Fox will have to duplicate his best rankings in both offensive categories and his strongest ranking on defense (third in 2005) the same season if he intends to wear a winning ring.

That's the Fact, Jack

Eric Goodman
Mile High Sports Magazine
August 29, 2012

Broncos fans have heard the same rhetoric for seven consecutive years.

"You're going to hear every defensive coordinator talk about being aggressive because that's what we're all looking for," said Denver's newest defensive coordinator, Jack Del Rio, the seventh man to wear that job title since 2006. "Aggressive has nothing to do with scheme; it has to do with the mentality you play with. It has to do with a mindset you approach tough moments with and your ability to perform in critical situations."

Call it mindset, scheme or lack of talent; the Broncos should have installed a revolving door to the defensive coordinators office the moment Larry Coyer was. And there's been plenty of speculation the wheels are greased for Del Rio to push his way out of Denver after this season, as he figures to be a hot coaching prospect. Yet he isn't in a hurry to leave the job he's barely started.

"Because I was a head coach for nine years, I'm not obsessed with being a head coach again," Del Rio explained. "I'm not obsessed with moving on. If it ever happens, great. But I'm really trying to be in the moment."

The moment is best embodied by a guy who won't play this season. Journeyman Jason Hunter was Del Rio's type of guy before he tore his triceps in training camp.

Best known for being stabbed in Detroit in 2011, Hunter embraced Del Rio's words and aggressively moved up the depth chart, replacing former first-round pick Robert Ayers at defensive end. Hunter played with a passion rarely seen in recent years and set the standard for what Del Rio wants this season.

"The guys who approach it that way are going to play more," the defensive coordinator said. "The guys who don't approach it that way are going to have a tough time staying here for long because that's what we're building. We're going to keep pushing for it, keep demanding it, and keep rewarding those that give it to us and make life difficult for those that don't."

It's been difficult for Ayers, but Del Rio makes no apologies, nor should he. His résumé is impressive.

A rugged linebacker during his 11-year NFL career and standing 6-foot-4, he can go eye to eye and toe to toe with any player on the Broncos roster. He's made a career of talking tough, backing it up and getting results, though he never thought it would happen when he retired before the 1996 season.

"I never thought about coaching when I was playing, never when I was playing," he said. "I looked at the hours the coaches work and I said, 'There's no way I'm doing that.' But as I got older, I realized I love the game too much to be away from it."

"Then, Tony Dungy called me and asked me how I was doing and took me to lunch. He said, 'Are you happy?' and I said, 'Yeah, I'm happy.' He said, 'Are you really happy?' and I said, 'No, I'm miserable.' He said, 'I think you'd be a great coach and I think you ought to pursue this.' So he invited me down to the Senior Bowl and next thing you know Mike Ditka gave me an opportunity in 1996 with the Saints."

Del Rio's didn't start to get noticed until he was the Ravens linebackers coach the year they won Super Bowl XXXV. He parlayed his success into joining John Fox as the Carolina Panthers defensive coordinator in 2002 - taking the 31st ranked defense to No. 2 in one season.

Del Rio was on the map and the Jacksonville Jaguars hired him as their head coach in 2003, where he stayed until last season.

Now, he's back with the man who gave him his first big break as a coordinator. They only spent one year together, and Fox would like to make sure it isn't another one and done.

Success breeds opportunity, so they'll be a host of suitors if Del Rio turns around the Broncos defense. He'll be a wanted man. But after talking to him, I'm not so sure he'll want out right away. If the Broncos are going to lose a coordinator after this season, the smart money is on Mike McCoy.

Get to Know: Dave Magazu

Stuart Zaas
DenverBroncos.com
August 22, 2012

Offensive Line Coach Dave Magazu talks about his position group's versatility, the importance of continuity and the effect of quarterback Peyton Manning.

Editor's Note: This coach Q&A ran in the 9/18 Gameday program, when the Broncos took on the Seattle Seahawks.

How important is continuity on the offensive line?

"I think it's a positive because the guys have worked together. They know each other. They know the terminology. It's easy to communicate because they are like one right now. We have some other guys who can fill in if we get a little nicked up here and there. All of those guys have been together and that's nothing but a positive, because one of the biggest things is communication and being on the same page, and I think we're there. We communicate much better today compared to the same time last year."

What does the signing of QB Peyton Manning mean for the offensive line?

"I think Peyton brings a lot of communication and a lot of knowledge to the game. The one thing you look for your quarterback to do from an offensive line standpoint is to paint a picture of what we're getting and getting everybody on the same page. I think he does a great job of that. The lines of communication are constant during the game and on the field and on the line of scrimmage. He does a great job of communicating and painting that picture for the guys up front."

What have you seen from the offensive line since the pads went on during training camp?

"I think we've made progress from last year. What we said when we came in here as a group, we're going to have to crawl before we can walk, walk before we can run, so we're going to continue to get better. I thought as a group, we improved as last year went on. There's still a lot of room for improvement and we're hoping to get to that next level."

How important is it for offensive linemen to be able to play multiple positions along the line?

"The NFL is different. It doesn't matter how many linemen you carry. On gameday, you usually dress seven. So those extra two guys, and some guys on your starting group, they need to be able to play more than one position to give you added depth. You have to have the ability to move guys around. They have to be able to play more than one position. Even with the starters, we have a couple guys that are dabbling at other positions for emergency purposes, or the wheels fall off, or for whatever. So we're trying to train some guys at more than one position. That brings you some added depth. I also think it helps a guy that plays more than one position to see some of the problems that other guys have."

Get to Know: Assistant Special Teams Coach Keith Burns

Stuart Zaas
DenverBroncos.com
September 28, 2012

Assistant Special Teams Coach Keith Burns talks about his relationship with Rod Smith and how Smith's story still impacts the Broncos.

Editor's Note: This Q&A story ran in the Sept. 23 Gameday program, when the Broncos played the Houston Texans.

What was Rod Smith like as a teammate?

"He was awesome. We came into the league together. His first year, our rookie year, he got put on practice squad and I was fortunate enough to make the team. He was always a great teammate. One thing he always had was his work ethic. He was very determined to do what he needed to do to allow himself to even make the team. He made the practice squad his rookie year because we were loaded at wide receiver. But once he got his opportunity to show what he could do, he took full advantage of it and the rest is pretty much history."

How excited were you to hear that Smith had been inducted into the Ring of Fame?

"I'm always happy for him. I would put him up there right with John (Elway) and Shannon (Sharpe) and them because I've seen where he was and I've seen where he is now and he's always been humble about everything that he's gotten, all the accolades and everything. We always say that there's no substitute for hard work. He never looked at that as any different, whether it was him having to cover a kick or him having to go out there and catch 10 balls in a game, he never wavered. He was willing to do whatever he had to do to win a game. That, to me, shows his mindset as far as the team concept goes. He's the epitome of a guy who is willing to go out there and do whatever it takes to win a game. So to see him go into the Ring of Fame, it's almost like your brother getting that same accolade. To have your name go up in the Ring of Fame, it's almost like the ultimate other than the Hall of Fame. But hopefully that will be the next thing coming up. To know him and to know the type of person that he is, I think he will cherish it and I'm just happy for him."

Do you think he deserves to be in the Hall of Fame?

"There's no question. I don't know what the criteria is, but if you just go off the pure numbers, he probably has the best undrafted numbers out there for a receiver. I know there's a lot of good receivers out there now waiting for that call."

But at the same time, you can put his numbers up to any of them and they compare. I think it's just a matter of time and it's not like he's in a rush to have to be in the Hall of Fame. He doesn't have to be a first-ballot guy, but at the same time, if the Pro Football Hall of Fame stands by what they stand for, there's no question that he'll be in, because he has the numbers. It's just the time thing. He has to wait his turn."

Do you use his story with current players?

"All the time. He even comes around, when he comes back around he tells a lot of the young guys that that's how he got his start, is starting on special teams. To have that opportunity, he just wanted to play ball. Whatever he had to do, whether it was covering a kick – I remember games where he covered kicks and caught passes and ran reverses and threw passes, so he basically did the whole gamut throughout his whole career. But knowing where he had to start, I always use his upbringing as far as his NFL goals, along with Terrell Davis, because they kind of parallel. Me coming in with Rod, knowing what he had to go through and what he's been through makes it that much more important. But I always tell the young guys, if there's a guy you ever want to pattern yourself after, especially wide receivers because you don't hear a lot of wide receivers being able to do a whole lot. I think he basically just took advantage of every opportunity that he got. He just loved the game, respected the game for what it was. So I'm always proud to say that I know a guy like that, who started on special teams and became an integral part of Broncos football."

Broncos strength coach Luke Richesson wants players to finish strong

By Jeff Legwold
The Denver Post
July 11, 2012

Even with all the cutting-edge equipment, scientific research and advances in technology that surround Luke Richesson in the Broncos' strength and conditioning center, there is still room for a little of the old-school approach.

There is still room for the idea that yes, eating breakfast matters. And lunch, dinner, two snacks and getting enough sleep.

"Some of what we do is based on the latest research, new ideas, but some of what we do isn't necessarily rooted in some grand scientific theory," said Richesson, in his first season as the Broncos' strength and conditioning coach. "It's 'Hey, did you eat breakfast today? Did you eat at regular intervals? Did you put the kind of food in you that will help you?'

"These guys are Ferraris. They are not work trucks. To be their best, they have to maintain themselves at all times. That's part of our message as we get our program going here to try to do our part to get this team where everybody wants it. And we know our challenges to do that."

Richesson said two of the biggest challenges are avoiding what has become a routine late-season swoon and finding ways to take advantage of playing at Denver's mile-high elevation. While playing at altitude has certainly helped the home team through the years — the Broncos have won 75 percent of their December home games in the franchise's history — Richesson believes there may be another side to the coin. He believes there is plenty of research, to go with his experiences as performance director at Athletes Performance Institute in Phoenix, a noted facility that has many current and future NFL players among its clients, that revealed living day-to-day at altitude has some impact as well.

"I think it's clear, the research is clear, it's more difficult to consistently maintain maximum performance, maximum output at altitude," Richesson said. "There's the build-up of (carbon dioxide) when you train that your body has to deal with, and we have less oxygen. So, to that end we have to make sure everything else in the program is in order. Even the simple things like meals, sleep, what we eat, take on a greater importance."

To that end Richesson has outfitted all of the Broncos players with heart monitors — they look like electronic harnesses — to wear during workouts. Richesson and his staff can then track each player's heart rate, using a hand-held device, at any point during a workout. All of the information is also collated and stored on computer.

Richesson said the devices also enable his staff to measure a player's overall progress over time and to monitor his recovery times from each part of the workouts in real time.

"They know right away how you did two weeks ago and two minutes ago," Broncos defensive end Elvis Dumervil said. "Even one day to the next. They see what's going on with you while you're going through it."

"The numbers don't lie," Richesson said. "If you see significant changes with athletes of this caliber in one-minute recovery times, two-minute recovery times, you know something's up. In almost every case, when you ask after seeing the numbers dip, something has impacted their diet, sleep schedules or there is an injury issue. We want to know, to be able to compare and track heart-rate performance at every level."

Richesson said he also believes it is possible to overtrain, something you don't hear much about in an era in which the benefits of intense training are preached. Even with elite athletes, he said, there is a point of diminishing returns.

The Broncos have revamped their weight room in recent weeks, have incorporated additional activities into their workouts — some drills based on mixed martial arts — and removed some of the more traditional free weights to replace them with pneumatic machines, which use air pressure to create resistance.

The new machines also measure, and display, a player's output during workouts in real time. And all of that information can be stored for comparison over time too.

It's all part of an effort to reverse the fact the Broncos are 26-76 in December regular-season road games in their franchise's history — that's just a 25.5 percent winning percentage. In the last three seasons alone, the Broncos have gone 1-3, 1-6 and 0-4 overall down the stretch and not finished above 8-8 in any of those years even as they won the AFC West title in 2011.

"Our goal is to get our guys in position to finish the race," Richesson said. "We want to jump from the gate, and we want to have something left to finish the race."

In Denver Broncos' front office, veterans form core for scouting, health

Jeff Legwold
The Denver Post
August 15, 2012

Today's question about the Broncos comes from Darryl Gibbens:

Q: Who is the longest tenured staff member on the Broncos? My best guess is Steve Antonopulos. I recall seeing him on the sidelines when Red Miller was coach. So, how about some nods to the heroes behind the scenes?

A: Darryl, your guess is right on the money, at least on the football side of the team's staff directory.

All you have to do is stroll by the vast array of team pictures the Broncos have adorning a hallway or two in their Dove Valley complex and it's clear just how long Steve Antonopulos has been with the organization.

There he is in the photos, a few spots down from Red Miller. There he is a few spots down from Dan Reeves. There he is a few spots down from Wade Phillips, Mike Shanahan, Josh McDaniels and now John Fox. The Broncos' head trainer has been with the team longer than Pat Bowlen has owned it — Bowlen is in his 29th season of ownership.

In all, this is Antonopulos' 36th season with the Broncos.

Antonopulos, called "Greek," by most everyone in the league, helped monitor the playing health of all of the players in all of those photos, including John Elway throughout Elway's playing career. Elway is now Antonopulos' boss with the Hall of Fame quarterback having been named the team's executive vice president of football operations in January of 2011.

Vice president of corporate communications Jim Saccomano is in his 35th year with the team and for most of those seasons handled media relations for the coaching staff, front office and players.

Midwest area scout Scott DiStefano, a former quarterback at CSU, is now in his 31st year with the Broncos. When he started with the team in addition to his scouting duties he also aided then assistant head coach-defensive coordinator Joe Collier break down game film.

Southwest area scout Cornell Green started with the Broncos in 1987, so he's in his 26th year with the franchise.

Green was selected to the Pro Bowl seven times in his playing career with the Cowboys despite the fact he was an undrafted player when he broke into the league.

The Broncos video staff has had plenty of staying power. Video operations manager Gary McCune is now in his 21st season, having started with the team when Reeves was head coach. Also, video assistant Kirt Horiuchi is in his 19th season and current video director Steve Boxer is in his 16th season.

The Broncos' turf manager, Troy Smith, started with the Broncos in 1994 and is now in his 19th year with the organization.

Among the football-related staff, Elway is likely next in line with 18 years with the franchise, 16 of those coming as a player.

Then there's assistant special teams coach Keith Burns, who is in his 17th year with the team, six of those as an assistant coach, 11 as a player over two stints with Denver.

Burns also played one season each in Chicago (1999) and Tampa Bay (2004). He played for the Broncos 1996-98 (he was a seventh-round draft pick in '94), 2000-03 and 2005-06. He joined Shanahan's coaching staff immediately following his playing career.

The Broncos' equipment manager, Chris Valenti, is now in his 16th season with the team, having started in 1997, the first of back-to-back Super Bowl seasons for the Broncos.

College scouting coordinator Dave Bratten is in his 14th season with the team, his 12th year in scouting. An Arvada native, Bratten started with the Broncos as a media relations intern, working for Saccomano, in 1997.

And in what is likely a testament to the loyalty Bowlen often shows the folks who work for him, that's the list and a fairly large one in a business that, for most teams in the league, often sees so much change on the football side of things.

Broncos Show Support for Colorado

Gray Caldwell
DenverBroncos.com
September 8, 2012

In 2012, Colorado has suffered through a tragic shooting in Aurora and multiple wildfires throughout the state.

To honor the victims of the tragedies and show their support for the state, the Broncos will wear a special helmet decal for the 2012 season.

The sticker — pictured above — is a ribbon featuring the state flag of Colorado.

The decal will make its first appearance this Sunday night, when the Broncos take on the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Showing support for their home state is an important cause for the Broncos this season. As linebacker Von Miller wrote in his latest blog, "We had a lot of stuff happen around Denver in the last year and we just want to bring some happiness and joy — and hopefully some wins — back to Colorado this season."

Broncos' Peyton Manning, Jacob Tamme and Brandon Stokley visit with former coach Tony Dungy

Mike Klis
The Denver Post
September 4, 2012

For a few minutes there, it seemed the old Indianapolis Colts had taken over Dove Valley.

Every Broncos player was off the practice fields Monday except for rookie Ronnie Hillman, who stayed late to field some kickoffs. Just off the other practice field were Peyton Manning, Jacob Tamme and Brandon Stokley, former Colts who were gathered around Tony Dungy, their old coach.

Dungy is now an NFL analyst for NBC, which will televise the Broncos' season opener Sunday night against Pittsburgh. The coach was here to tape an interview with Manning, his former quarterback.

How Manning and his Broncos offense attack this season, Dungy said, will depend on how the defense plays them.

"How are people going to play him?"

Dungy said. "My guess is they will play them to take away the run early and see if he can do it. I think they'll be forced to throw early, and my guess is he'll throw pretty well — and then when the defense starts to play pass, those running backs will get going."

Steven "Walk-on" Johnson. Broncos coach Richard Smith could probably spot a linebacker from a Grand Central Station crowd during rush hour. It has to be easier than finding the talent that is Steven Johnson.

Growing up in the Philadelphia area, Johnson walked on with the Kansas Jayhawks. Four years later, Johnson not only was undrafted, he played for a Kansas defense that last season gave up 66 points to Georgia Tech, 70 points to Oklahoma State, 59 to Kansas State and 61 to Texas A&M.

Yet, Smith loved what he saw of Johnson on film and signed him as a college free agent. And now here Johnson is, unquestionably this year's Cinderella on the Broncos' 53-man roster.

"I kind of did it again, you know," Johnson said. "Being a college free agent is kind of like being a walk-on. I beat the odds twice."

Brandon "Comeback" Stokley. Appreciation for making the 53-man roster isn't just for undrafted rookies. Broncos slot receiver Brandon Stokley is 36 and set to begin his 14th season — two years after the Broncos released him with an injury settlement just before the 2010 season.

He caught on with Seattle that season, and briefly with the New York Giants in 2011, but most people figured he was done.

"I thought I was done," Stokley said. " I was pretty much 99 percent done. There was a 1 percent chance I would ever play again. But everything fell into place. So I know how fortunate I am. Now I want to take advantage of it. I didn't come back just to make the team. I want to help this team win games."

Footnotes. Several players changed numbers. Most notably, Hillman is now No. 21 and safety Jim Leonhard is No. 36. ... After practice Monday, Bronco players broke into three groups for their annual luncheon. All the offensive players went to one fine-dining establishment, all the defensive players went to another, and all three specialists — Matt Prater, Britton Colquitt and Aaron Brewer — went to yet another.

Denver Broncos safety Mike Adams a big fan of helping children

Lindsay H. Jones
The Denver Post
September 23, 2012

As a child growing up in Paterson, N.J., Mike Adams said he and his peers had two choices: sports or the streets.

Adams picked sports, and now, at age 31 and in his ninth season in the NFL, is working toward a goal of establishing a community center for kids in his old neighborhood.

Adams was the first free agent signed by the Broncos this past offseason as part of a plan to revamp the team's secondary with the expected retirement of safety Brian Dawkins. When Dawkins officially decided to end his career in May, Adams took over ownership of jersey No. 20, the number he began wearing as a college player at the University of Delaware.

Q: What do you want Broncos fans to know about you as a player?

A: I want them to see that I play hard, and that I still have the passion as when I was playing in high school, and that I still run around like I was 21. I want them to know I go hard every play, and you can expect me going 100 percent all the time.

Q: That certainly sounds like Brian Dawkins. Do you think you have big shoes to fill replacing him?

A: No. Not at all. I mean, I don't feel any pressure. I'm my own man. I've never been to a Pro Bowl; he's been to a bunch of Pro Bowls. I'm not as big as him; I'm just me. We are two different players. I admire him, and I tried to mimic part of game, especially his intensity.

Q: What was your childhood like in New Jersey?

A: It was rough growing up because there really wasn't much to do but play football in the backyard. Like right now, there's no place like a community center, no place for kids to go to get away from the streets and all the negativity. That's all we had, really, was sports.

Q: How has that impacted what you like to do off the field?

A: That's why I'm now focused on New Jersey, on doing a lot of stuff there. Ultimately my goal is to get a community center up and running. I do a lot of things there, like backpack drives, free haircuts, free football camps, things like that.

Q: How close are you to the goal of starting a community center?

A: I'll be more in tune with it when I'm done with football. Right now it's difficult because I'm a hands-on guy. I don't want to have someone else do it.

Q: Did you always want to play safety?

A: At first I wanted to play receiver. But then I started getting hit in high school, and I decided I wanted to hit people. You can't hit anybody on offense, so I switched to defense.

Q: How did you end up at Delaware?

A: Nobody else wanted me. It was funny, Rutgers came to recruit me. And (the coach) asked me all sorts of questions: Was I smart enough? Was I big enough? And I said, "Do you think I'm big enough or smart enough?" He gave me a stale look, so I said, "Have a nice day." I left. End of the day, I ended up in Delaware. It was between Maine and Delaware. My mother told me that no matter which school I went to, I had to get my education first anyway. That helped me a lot. (Adams earned a degree in family communications.)

Q: You've also played cornerback in the NFL. Is it an advantage, having experience at both positions?

A: I think so, because I understand what a corner sees. Sometimes, for instance, Champ Bailey or me and Tracy Porter, I can just give him a nod, or they nod at me and they can do something and know that I've got their back. And vice versa.

Q: Other than Dawkins, who were some of your favorite players to watch when you were young?

A: Jerry Rice, Roger Craig. I was a 49ers fan.

Q: How does a New Jersey kid end up cheering for San Francisco?

A: It was because of rivalry between the Giants and the 49ers back then. My brother is a die-hard Giants fan. It was basically the whole house. I was the oddball, I was always different, so I adopted the 49ers. It was on from there.

Q: So it must have been special to start your career with the 49ers.

A: That was about the coolest thing ever. Actually, I teared up. When I had my first day of practice for the 49ers, I took my helmet off and looked at it. I was like, "Holy cow."

Mike Adams

Age: 31.

Hometown: Paterson, N.J.

College: Delaware.

Draft: Undrafted in 2004, signed with San Francisco as a college free agent.

Experience: Ninth year. Played for San Francisco from 2004-06 and for Cleveland from 2007-11.

2012 stats: 12 total tackles, four passes defended in two games.

Broncos camp report: Eternals Bailey, Manning have it covered on both sides

Mike Freeman
CBS Sports
August 7, 2012

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. -- Maybe the most physically gifted athlete in NFL history sits humbly, smiling. There are no proclamations of greatness. He doesn't need them. No cockiness, no smart ass-ness. Not his style. Just Champ Bailey talking football.

Or, more to the point, longevity. The fact that Bailey has played the corner position, still covering the opposition's best receiver, week in and week out, remains one of the most incredible stories football has ever seen. It's difficult to quantify but Bailey joins an elite and small group that covered the best receiving weapons, one-on-one, well into his 30s, and at a Pro Bowl level.

One was Washington's Darrell Green, who played into his late 30s and until the day he retired covered the best receiving option. There are a few others, like Willie Brown, but what Bailey is doing might surpass even those Hall of Famers. As Bailey has aged, the speed of the game has changed dramatically. He's covering faster receivers than Green or Brown ever did, but still staying with them, stride for stride.

Bailey is also dealing with rules changes that cause a defensive back to be flagged if a pinky grazes a shoulder pad. The football world Bailey still dominates is more complex than the ones his aged and skilled predecessors played in.

"I remember five years ago people told me since I was getting to my 30s that I'd be retiring soon," the 34-year-old Bailey said in an interview. "Well, here I am."

Here he is, indeed. While Peyton Manning may be the story of the Denver Broncos, it is Bailey, again, who is the non-aging centerpiece. Receivers have come and gone. Corners have come and gone. So have NFL commissioners, presidents, space stations and sitcoms. The Earth has warmed, oceans have risen, dynasties have fallen ... all during Bailey's career, which started in 1999.

Bailey has stayed indestructible while still possessing incredible speed. He denied what a teammate told me, that Bailey plans to play two more years and then retire.

"I'm planning year to year," he said. "Right now I feel too good to think about retiring."

Maybe the best way to describe what Bailey has done is let another eternal do it for him.

"I played against Champ three years in college, and so I remember him as a true freshman at Georgia," Manning said. "I remember how talented he was, and you just knew he was going to be a good player. I played against him my second year in Indy when he was with the Redskins, so I was telling somebody that the other day -- they're like, 'Champ played for the Redskins, and you played against him?' It's just like forever ago, I guess. But I think it's pretty well documented that every time I've played against him, you always get asked about Champ, and he's the best corner I've played against in my career, and he's been unbelievably consistent.

"I've played the Broncos a number of times, and he always shows up, he's always ready to go. He presents an intense matchup problem. Champ has never intercepted me in the NFL, but I don't think I've ever thrown a touchdown on him either, so it's a pretty good battle. He got me in college one time on an interception, so I'm glad we're on the same team. [The Colts] always had healthy respect for Champ. We never threw away from a certain guy because we felt like we loved our receivers. With Marvin [Harrison] and Reggie [Wayne], we're going to throw to those guys, but you always knew where Champ was. If you couldn't set your feet into it, it wasn't worth throwing. If you threw behind him, he was going to make you pay. ..."

And here he is ... again.

Sports: Having a "Ball" with Teaneck's Lance Ball

Bob Klapisch
201 Magazine
August 29, 2012

Lance Ball had been waiting for this moment his entire life – every one of his 26 years, four months and 25 days – which meant he was ready to sprint through the door the fates had just opened.

The war: Denver Broncos versus Kansas City Chiefs.

The calendar: Nov. 13, 2011.

The emergency: Denver's starting running backs, Willis McGahee and Knowshon Moreno, were down with first-quarter injuries.

The solution: Ball, a Teaneck native, rushing to the huddle – or, more accurately, body-surfing a wave of adrenaline.

"It happened so fast," Ball says, not even remembering why this was such a long shot.

Ball, after all, was a ghost to those outside the Broncos family. Until that moment, he had carried the ball in exactly one NFL game, having been cut five times by four teams – including once by the Broncos in September 2010.

But Ball was quick to rearrange those facts. All those years of waiting, he decided, were nothing more than extended calisthenics, better preparing him to seize the day. It's the kind of carpe diem that usually takes place on the silver screen, but this was no fuzzy Hollywood moment. This was Ball turning in a breakthrough performance that awakened the Broncos and their fans alike: He carried the ball 30 times against the Chiefs, picking up 96 yards in Denver's 17-10 win. Just that easily, Ball let the world in on a secret he'd always known about himself.

"All I'd ever wanted was the chance, and the rest would take care of itself," he says. "Once I got to that point, it was all instinct. I just had to keep the faith."

It's impossible to take inventory of Ball's career without noting the obstacles, starting with his size. At 5 feet 9 inches, Ball is at least two inches shorter than the average NFL running back, which made it harder to attract the attention of pro scouts. After graduating from Teaneck High School in 2003, where he rushed for 3,403 yards and 39 touchdowns, Ball went on to a stellar four-year career at the University of Maryland. By his sophomore year, Ball was already an ACC force, earning second-team all-conference honors.

Yet Ball was passed over in the NFL's college draft in 2008 – a setback for the player who, until then, had always prevailed against the odds.

"I really thought I'd get picked somewhere between the fourth and seventh rounds, but a lot of teams were on the fence," he says.

Talent evaluators failed to quantify Ball's low center of gravity and the exponential way he used his 220 pounds to surprise would-be tacklers.

Only now do the Broncos understand what makes Ball a nightmare to bring down.

"Lance plays bigger than he is," quarterback Tim Tebow said last year. "I think it comes from his thick lower body. He runs harder than what his body weight says. He's stronger than you would think."

It took stops in several camps for that revelation to gain traction in the NFL. Ball was on the periphery in St. Louis, Tennessee, Indianapolis and Denver for part of three seasons, during which time he had carried the ball a total of 13 times. Those lean years should've been enough to discourage even the most driven athlete, but Ball reasoned he had several factors still working in his favor.

First, he had a degree in family studies with a minor in community health, which meant there was always a plan B waiting. Second, in an era when pro athletes often end up bold-faced on the gossip pages – or worse, on the police blotter – Ball has lived quietly on the other end of the social spectrum. He's mature and low-maintenance, the kind of player coaches often choose over more talented but more volatile stars. "Dependable" is what Ball calls himself, an asset that rolls over into even higher praise.

"I stay out of trouble," he says. "I'm a good guy and a good guy in the community."

Ball learned the importance of connecting while growing up in Teaneck, which in retrospect he calls "unique" in its enlightened, diverse culture.

"I've since moved out, but I still go home once or twice a year," he says. "It makes me appreciate what a special place Teaneck was, how it stressed community and friendships. We had a good school [system] and good athletics."

Still, it's not an easy sell when Ball describes the Garden State to teammates, not one of whom played college ball in the northeast.

"When they hear New Jersey, people think, 'Oh, you're from the Jersey Shore,'" Ball says with a laugh. "I try to tell them [Teaneck] is nowhere close to there, and it's totally different, anyway."

Once they get past the ribbing, Ball is able to peel away the layers of psychological flesh to reveal his nuclear core, that tenacious, me-against-the-odds engine.

"I was in Lance's shoes at one time – chasing a dream – and I never stuck anywhere, so when you have players like him it has special meaning to me," Broncos offensive coordinator Mike McCoy told the New York Post. "In this business, it's being in the right place at the right time and making the most of opportunities, and that's exactly what Lance has done."

Ball's universe has changed for the better since his unveiling against the Chiefs last November. He is no longer an afterthought on the Broncos' depth chart, but an integral part of an offense that, now being run by Peyton Manning, looks to be even more dangerous than it was under Tebow, who is now with the Jets.

There are inherent dangers for Ball, who knows the longer he plays, the more times he's taken down by a crunching tackle, the greater the chance of head injury later in life.

"I do worry about how I'm going to be 10, 15, 20 years from now," he says, especially as doctors continue to explore the connection between repeated head trauma and early dementia.

But Ball has spent too much of his life chasing one dream – football – to replace it with another – post-football – just yet. Besides, the fates have always been kind to the kid from Teaneck, who wasn't larger than his uniform but somehow has always been larger than life. That's some winning streak.

Denver Broncos CB Omar Bolden switched from RB in high school

Lindsay H. Jones
The Denver Post
September 30, 2012

Editor's note: Each Sunday throughout the season, The Denver Post's Broncos reporters help readers get to know the players on a more personal level.

Playing cornerback at a high level was Omar Bolden's ticket to the NFL, yet the Broncos' rookie fourth-round draft choice came to the position reluctantly.

He has Pete Carroll (and Joe McKnight) to thank for it.

Bolden played only running back until Carroll, then the coach at Southern California, asked him to switch to defense during a summer camp before Bolden's senior year of high school.

Bolden remembered McKnight, one of the nation's top running back recruits, barreling toward him after catching a swing pass. The players weren't wearing pads, but Bolden realized he was either going to absorb a hit or deliver one.

"I kind of got a little physical with him and I made him fumble the ball," Bolden said. "And after that it was like, instantly, I've got to be one of the top corners in the nation. I was kind of upset, because I didn't want to play corner. At the end of the day, though, it was the fastest way for me to get on the field, and that's all I cared about anyway. I just wanted to play."

Bolden didn't wind up playing for Carroll, instead picking Arizona State. Bolden missed his senior year with the Sun Devils after suffering a torn anterior cruciate ligament in spring football in 2011.

Now in the NFL, he won the job as the Broncos' kickoff returner and is trying to work up the depth chart at cornerback.

Q: When did you realize that playing cornerback, and not running back, was the right position for you?

A: As a running back, you take all the pounding, all the beating. I felt so much better after the games. My body felt great. It was like, Pete Carroll just extended my career by nine years. That's how I felt. At first I hated it, but then it was like, "Thank God."

Q: What were teen years like in California?

A: Wild. Just ran the streets. Problems going on at home, so I kind of low-key just abandoned school.

Q: What do you mean by "abandoned school?"

A: I kind of went, kind of didn't. It was like freshman and sophomore year. That was about the time I realized I was good at football. But I kind of just did enough to get by, and it ended up hurting me. My senior year, I think I was enrolled in 12 classes. Night school, Saturday school, classes at a junior college. I had seven periods at school — most seniors had four.

Q: When did it sink in that you might not graduate?

A: It was never an issue of if I was going to graduate. But it was an issue of going to college. My junior year, my coach was like, "There is no way you're going to get into school if you don't do something." Pete Carroll came to my school and told me, "Listen, man, you can be big, but you've got to get your academics in order." He came at me with a plan, and I executed the plan and I made it.

Q: What were your emotions like last year, going from the high of deciding to return to school, then tearing your ACL so soon after?

A: It was terrible. It was like, I could have left (for the NFL). The reason I chose to come back was because I got a fourth-round grade. I was a fourth this year. Part of me was saying it was a dumb decision and I should have taken my chances and left. But there was part of me that figured everything happens for a reason. At least I was able to graduate. I was the third person in my family to graduate. That was huge for my family, because we set the trend now.

Q: Was it tough to watch ASU last year?

A: I had dreams of winning the Thorpe Award, of being a Heisman finalist, all sorts of things. So I'm watching games unfold on the field and I'm thinking, "If I was out there, I could have made that play." So for that and to see us struggle at the same time, that (was tough) 'cause I know I could have made an impact.

Q: How has that shaped your perspective here as a rookie in the NFL?

A: It just let me know not to take any of this for granted, because at any moment it can all be taken away from you. No one touched me when I got hurt. I was just running, so it gave me a new perspective on the game and on life. You've got to enjoy it while you're here.

Aurora shootings resonate with Broncos receiver Eric Decker

Mike Klis
The Denver Post
July 27, 2012

Both here and everywhere, the shootings at the Aurora theater last week stirred thoughts and feelings in nearly every able-minded, feeling person.

For Broncos receiver Eric Decker, the tragedy caused a flashback.

"It brought back some tough memories," Decker said. "It sparked some emotions. It sparked memories of what happened in high school."

Decker was a junior at Rocori High School in the small town of Cold Spring, Minn., sitting in the cafeteria during his lunch period when the principal went on the intercom and announced "Code Red."

The cafeteria and classroom doors were locked up. The school had just gone through a Code Red exercise a couple weeks earlier, but this was no practice drill.

Two of Decker's high school classmates were shot dead by 15-year-old freshman Jason McLaughlin. It was Minnesota's first fatal shooting by a student inside a school.

It's impossible for anyone to fully understand what the people inside theater no. 9 at Century Aurora 16 were experiencing on July 20 when suspect James Holmes allegedly interrupted the midnight premier of the latest Batman movie by firing on them, killing 12 and injuring 58.

But Decker may understand a little more than others.

"It's something that's always with you," said Decker, who led all Broncos receivers last season in catches (44), yards (612) and touchdowns (eight). "It's not something I talk about much. It's something where I try not to dwell on it because it's such a bad memory. But it's there. It's always there."

The circumstances between the shootings at Rocori High and the Aurora theater had many differences. Holmes' alleged shooting spree seemed random, although far more elaborately planned. McLaughlin's trial revealed he had targeted fellow freshman Seth Bartell, who supposedly had long teased the gunman. McLaughlin's second shot at Bartell missed and hit 17-year-old Aaron Rollins in the neck, killing the senior. Decker knew Rollins well as they had played baseball together.

Bartell ran into the gym where he was shot in the head by the pursuing McLaughlin. Sitting in the gym bleachers with other students was physical education teacher Mark Johnson, who upon stepping toward McLaughlin, drew a pointed gun. Johnson, an imposing man, held out a hand and commanded "stop."

McLaughlin obeyed the teacher. He discharged his gun and essentially surrendered to Johnson. Bartell died 16 days later from his gun wounds. McLaughlin's attorneys used an insanity defense, but he was found guilty of first-degree murder of Bartell and second-degree murder of Rollins and given a life sentence.

The similarity between the shootings at Cold Spring, Minn. and the Aurora theater were that innocent people were participating in some of the most wholesome of American events — attending high school; attending a movie — and wound up dead.

Decker joined six of his Broncos teammates in visiting patients from the theater shooting Sunday at the Medical Center of Aurora.

One of the patients the Bronco players met with was Stephen Barton, whose 4,500-mile bike ride from Virginia to San Francisco was interrupted about 3,000 miles in. A stop in Aurora resulted in shotgun buckshot to his neck and face.

"They're talking about him completing that bike ride to San Francisco and having a fundraiser with it," Decker said. "I think it would be cool to get a bunch of Broncos involved in that."

Broncos Q&A: Joel Dreessen glad to be able to go home again

Lindsay H. Jones
The Denver Post
September 9, 2012

When tight end Joel Dreessen signed with the Broncos as a free agent in March, he made the decision to come home to the state where he was raised (in Fort Morgan) and where he played college football (at Colorado State).

But this homecoming meant making the difficult decision.

Dreessen, 30, could have stayed with the Houston Texans and likely finished his career in the Lone Star State.

That would have been too easy, Dreessen said.

Instead, he decided that joining the Broncos, with quarterback Peyton Manning and an entirely new offense, was just the type of challenge he needed at this point in his career.

"I don't want to say I was complacent, but I wanted to see if I could push my comfort zone and I wanted to see if I could get better and improve as a player, as an athlete, as a person," Dreessen said.

The decision brought Dreessen, wife Stacy and 2-year-old son Dylan back home, where Sunday night Dreessen will make his debut in the stadium where he previously played as a Ram and a Texan.

Q: What was the deciding factor for you in picking Denver over Houston?

A: Honestly, it was Peyton and Mr. Elway having me believing in the opportunity we had to do something special. I think (head trainer Steve Antonopoulos) put it up on the quote board the other day, basically, it's better to strike out doing something new than walk on the same beaten path on which you've already had success.

Q: How different, then, has it been for you here, in learning his offense compared with what you were used to with the Texans?

A: Playing tight end in the NFL is going to be the same thing. You have to hold up on the line of scrimmage against some of the best athletes — defensive ends, outside linebackers — blocking. Then you also have to run routes and get open and catch the ball. My job is the same, but the terminology is completely different. It was like learning a new language, and then the little techniques to every single play. In Houston, I knew what defenses were going to do to us, I knew what technique I was going to use to combat that. Here I'm still going through a lot of that.

Q: Let's talk about home. What was it like for you as a kid in Fort Morgan?

A: There wasn't a whole lot to do as a young person in that town, so you kind of had to make your own fun. Basically me and my friends, we grew up playing football in my backyard. My dad had this big lawn that he took so much pride in, fertilizing it, watering it. I grew up outside of town, so we were always playing in the cornfields and floating inner tubes down irrigation ditches. In the wintertime when it would snow, we'd go across the road, there was a gravel pit and we'd go sledding.

Q: How did you wind up at Colorado State?

A: I went to a football camp there, the summer before my senior year, and Coach (Sonny) Lubick said "Hey we want to offer you a scholarship." That was my first offer. I played about halfway through my senior year and I asked CU: "Look, are you going to offer me? Because otherwise I'm going to commit to Colorado State." They said no, they liked this other guy out of Kansas. So that was that. (Note: CU went with Quinn Sypniewski instead. He played in 31 games in 2006-07 for Baltimore.)

Q: What is your life like away from football?

A: Me and my wife's baby is our ranch. We have an 800-acre ranch about 75 miles east of Amarillo, Texas. We have eight head of cattle now. We lease some of the pasture land. We mostly are using it for hunting purposes now. That's my favorite thing to do. White tail deer, turkey, wild pigs, dove, quail, ducks, geese. It's a lot of fun.

College: Colorado State

Draft: Sixth round by New York Jets in 2005

Career stats: 93 total games (79 with the Texans), 110 catches, 1,364 yards, 13 touchdowns.

What to expect: Dreessen and fellow free-agent addition Jacob Tamme should see the field together plenty in two-tight-end packages. Dreessen is more of the traditional tight end in that scenario.

Personal: Married to Stacy. The couple has a 2-year-old son and is expecting a daughter in October.

Broncos' Elvis Dumervil honors family of victim Jesse Childress

Mike Klis
The Denver Post
July 29, 2012

Know this Staff Sgt. Jesse Childress: You have done more for Elvis Dumervil than your favorite Broncos player has done for you.

A day after Childress was buried at Fort Logan National Cemetery, a humbled Dumervil presented one of his framed game jerseys to Childress' family members following the Broncos' practice Sunday.

Along the stem of his "2" Dumervil inscribed: "Sgt. Childress, My thoughts and prayers are with your family. Jesse will always be in my thoughts and I will play with him in my heart."

Childress was one of 12 people killed in an Aurora theater shooting July 20. Dumervil was touched when told about a story in The Denver Post that said Childress wore his No. 92 jerseys on Broncos game days.

About a 3-wood drive away from where Dumervil met with the Childress family was the Arapahoe County Jail where theater shooting suspect James Holmes is being held.

"My perspective as a mother is (Holmes) has a mother, too," said Lisa Childress, Jesse's mom. "My heart goes out to his mom. That's just how our family thinks."

Dumervil had been bummed about his own problems until the Childress family helped him gain some perspective. The Broncos' star pass rusher was arrested in Miami Beach on July 15 allegedly for flashing a handgun in his waistband at a person in another car.

But the Miami-Dade state attorney's office has yet to file charges and two sources close to Dumervil say he did not have a gun on him, the gun in question is not his and he will be cleared once the investigation is completed.

"Lisa and Shannon, Jesse's mom and dad, they're such great people," Dumervil said. "You know, I've been going through some things and you when you hear about a thing like that you realize that there are bigger things than me, things that are bigger than all of us. You think you have it bad, but then something like this happens and you understand your problems are nothing compared to what so many other people are going through. When I heard they had my jersey at his funeral, it was just moving, man. They're a great family. Humble people. I will definitely play with them in my heart this year."

Chris Gronkowski settles into fullback role

Pat Graham
Associated Press
August 24, 2012

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. (AP) - A tad bit taller and Chris Gronkowski might have been a tight end like his brothers.

Instead, he's the rare fullback lining up in a Peyton Manning backfield.

Typically, Manning doesn't operate out of a two-back system. But the Denver Broncos are adding all sorts of wrinkles to the offensive scheme this season, even pairing tailback Willis McGahee with Gronkowski on occasion.

It could be a gainful duo, especially in short-yardage situations.

And then there's always this: Gronkowski can catch the ball, too. He does come from a family of pass catchers led by his younger brother, Rob, who set an NFL single-season record for tight ends last year with 17 TD receptions for New England. His older brother, Dan, also is a tight end, for Cleveland.

"I didn't get the height they got," said the 6-foot-2 Chris Gronkowski, who's four inches shorter than Rob. "I had no other choice."

That's perfectly fine by the Broncos (No. 10 in the AP Pro32), who don't need tight ends nearly as much as skilled blockers - to pave the way for McGahee and to keep Manning on his feet.

"You don't want to be that guy to give up a big hit on Peyton," said Gronkowski, whose team hosts San Francisco in a preseason game Sunday. "It definitely puts some pressure on you."

So far in camp, Gronkowski hasn't worked all that much with Manning & Co. Not surprisingly, he said, because the receivers need more reps with the four-time MVP to get their timing down.

And so Gronkowski patiently waits for his opportunity. How much field time Gronkowski will receive once the season begins, well, he has no way of knowing. With Manning utilizing a no-huddle offense, Gronkowski might not even be out there that much.

Should the Broncos get down close to the goal line - or build a lead they want to protect - that may be his cue to enter.

"This is a whole new dimension," said the 25-year-old Gronkowski, who's from Williamsville, N.Y. "It (a two-back system) is definitely something Manning hasn't run in the past that could help him. It's harder for a defense to prepare for all of that."

When the Broncos signed Manning in March, there was constant speculation over which of his former teammates the Broncos might try to lure to the Mile High City.

In the end, the Broncos signed former Colts receiver Brandon Stokley and tight end Jacob Tamme. Not only that, but they traded for Gronkowski three months ago, sending cornerback Cassius Vaughn to Indy.

Although their paths crossed with the Colts, Gronkowski never played alongside Manning. By the time he arrived last September, Manning was sidelined with a neck injury.

Still, Manning's presence was hard to miss.

"He was kind of a coach on the sideline," Gronkowski said. "He's coaching us up here as well, making sure everyone's doing the right thing."

"This is my first time on the field with him and so far it's been great. I know he always wanted a fullback. That's what they told me when I got to Indy. I hope I do what he expects."

As for his brothers, Gronkowski said he's not as quiet as Dan or as colorful as Rob, who received a six-year, $54 million contract extension in June, the largest ever given to an NFL tight end. They're the first trio of brothers in the NFL at the same time since the Baldingers (Brian, Gary and Rich) in 1992.

"It's cool," he said. "It's more about my brother Rob, but it feels good to get my name thrown in there, too, every once in a while. We're just having fun with it. Having three brothers in the league has been real fun for the whole family, and we're just trying to keep it going."

Confession: Chris Gronkowski wouldn't mind being a tight end like Dan and Rob. He did have 12 catches for 218 yards at the University of Arizona - an 18.2 yards per catch average, he proudly points out.

"If I was just as tall, I could play tight end," he said, grinning. "I wasn't as lucky as them."

Now, he's eager to make his mark at another position.

"Technique-wise, it's kind of all the same," Gronkowski said. "You just have to go in there every day and go hard. ... It's just a mentality that you have to have. You have to stay focused and be mentally tough. That's what I've really learned: every day is a grind and you have to go hard."

NOTES: Manning on facing the 49ers, who showed an interest in him during free agency: "I can't speak for them. It's pretty well documented how all of that went down in the offseason. I'm not really going down memory lane." ... K Matt Prater connected on a 56-yard field goal in practice.

Vying For Time

Cornerback Chris Harris is continuing to improve as he enters his second season with the Broncos.

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. -- Undrafted rookie Chris Harris climbed the depth chart to start four games last season with a tenacious work ethic that was first noticed during offseason workouts.

That earned him some early-season playing time with the special teams unit – but as he continued to raise eyebrows on the Broncos' sideline, he found a niche during the second half of the season at nickel cornerback.

Now entering his second year in the league, the cornerback from Kansas knows that despite his success in 2011, his job isn't guaranteed in 2012.

"Being an undrafted free agent, you have to prove yourself every year," Harris said. "So I never stop working."

If he's going to maintain a similar role in a deeper, more talented Broncos' secondary, he'll have to show the same zeal that first caught the coaches' eyes last year – because experience isn't a factor the 22-year-old has in his favor. This offseason, the team brought in three veteran defensive backs - cornerbacks Tracy Porter and Drayton Florence and safety Mike Adams. Combined, the three have played 21 years in the league.

But 2011 team captain Champ Bailey said he hasn't noticed Harris backing down from the competition.

"He's holding his own," Bailey said, noting that Harris always has a smile on his face. "That's one thing about him, he's such a competitor. He feels confident about what he does. He's just letting his play speak for itself."

As for Harris, he believes the additions to the secondary can only help him.

"It's just something I can gain experience from," Harris said. "These guys have been in the league for a long time. They are just adding competition and just making me better."

"We all talked as defensive backs and said we're never going to give each other bad advice, always try to help each other," he continued. "The competition is only going to make everybody better."

Although the unit will work together to improve as a whole, no one has lost sight of the fact that most slots on the depth chart might remain blank through training camp.

"We all understand every spot is up for grabs, except Champ's," Harris said. "There's competition everywhere."

Surrounded by proven veterans, Harris' youth may count against him in the early goings. But to him, his young age only means more room for improvement and more time to learn.

"Really I just want to get faster and stronger," he said. "I'm only 22 years old. We drafted a guy that's older than me coming in, so I'm still young, still learning the game a lot more. There's a lot I can learn."

The draftee that Harris is referring to could be the 26-year old center from Baylor, Philip Blake. Or, it could be Omar Bolden, the 23-year old cornerback from Arizona State. Bolden is another name who will be fighting for those second, third, and fourth cornerback spots. Like Harris, Bolden was a four-year starter in college. But what Bolden hasn't done yet is go toe-to-toe with some of the NFL's top receivers. That kind of experience is what Harris hopes will make him a valuable asset to the Broncos' defense.

"Playing against top receivers like (Wes) Welker, Antonio Gates, I kind of got thrown in on the fly," Harris said. "Being able to go out there and play against those top guys definitely gives me confidence going into this season."

He earned playing time in Denver's two playoff games as well, making five tackles against Pittsburgh in the first round and starting against the Patriots in round two.

"Not a lot of undrafted rookies get that experience in the playoffs," Harris said.

Regardless of the fact that nearly every defensive back -- young or old -- is trying to secure a spot on the depth chart, the true task at hand is the same for every member of the Denver Broncos.

"We're all here for one common goal, and that's to win a Super Bowl," Harris said.

Broncos' Ronnie Hillman Once Played For Snoop Dog

CBS4

August 28, 2012

DENVER (CBS4) – Denver Broncos running back Ronnie Hillman was the guest on Xfinity Monday Live this week.

Hillman played his college ball at San Diego State and he played youth football for a fellow by the name of Calvin Broadus — a.k.a. Snoop Dog, who recently changed his name to Snoop Lion.

“He wanted to give up the Snoop Dog because it’s known for the gangster life. So now he’s a peaceful guy ... like Bob Marley,” Hillman said.

Hillman said Snoop knows the game of football.

“He actually oversees things. It was his team but he had coaches that actually coached,” he said. “So we just traveled and went and played people, like famous people.”

He said he doesn’t really keep in touch with Snoop anymore except through Twitter and other social media.

“We don’t call each other every day.”

Nate Irving prepared for second time around

Chuck Carree
Wilmington (N.C.) Star News
September 7, 2012

Nate Irving played in all 16 Denver Broncos games last season and continues to revamp his approach heading into Season 2 in the National Football League.

I think I have made a little bit of progress, but I still think I have a long ways to go," the ex-Wallace-Rose Hill High School star said as the Broncos prepare for their season opener Sunday night vs. Pittsburgh (8:20 p.m., NBC).

The Broncos saw enough potential to select him in the third round of the 2011 draft out of N.C. State, where he was an All-Atlantic Coast Conference linebacker two years ago.

With the Wolfpack, he was an intuitive player, allowed to improvise. He led the team with 97 tackles in his final season, including 20.5 for losses.

Now he is adjusting to a more structured scheme.

"It is more so about being technically sound," he said. "In college, I could freelance a little bit and just make plays. But in the NFL, everyone is elite and you can't do that. That is why you have to be technically sound because every little mistake you make can result in me giving up a big play for a touchdown. It may be the touchdown that costs us the game."

Irving is listed as a second-team linebacker, but his biggest contributions will come on special teams. He is on punt coverage, kickoff coverage, field goals and extra points.

"But if my name and number is called on defense, I have to step in and be ready to pick up where Von Miller left off," he said.

Miller was NFL Defensive Rookie of the Year in 2011 and also participated in the Pro Bowl. He was taken one round ahead of Irving.

In this year's four preseason games, he finished second on the team with 14 tackles, including 13 solo hits.

"The preseason was good," Irving said. "It was a chance to get in there and fly around and play football."

Last season, he had four special teams tackles and one in a playoff loss at New England.

He called a first-round playoff win over the Steelers the highlight of his career thus far.

With the acquisition of Peyton Manning, the Broncos have high hopes of repeating as AFC West champions, but Irving said little about the hype surrounding the star quarterback.

"He is here to help us get better," he said. "Defensively, we have to just focus on what we can do more so than worry about the other side of the ball."

As for Irving, he is just thankful his career did not end when he fell asleep behind the wheel, resulting in an automobile accident and compound leg fracture, separated shoulder, collapsed lungs and broken ribs. It forced him to sit out the 2009 season.

He has the date of the accident – 6-28-09 tattooed on his left forearm.

"I have been through so much with the car accident," he said. "To come back from that is just a blessing in itself."

Under the Helmet: Malik Jackson

DenverBroncos.com sat down with rookie defensive lineman Malik Jackson to discuss his transition to the NFL, his preseason progress and whether his father, a Steelers fan, will root for the Broncos on Sunday.

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. -- Malik Jackson, a rookie fifth-rounder out of Tennessee, finished tied for fifth on the team and first among defensive linemen with eight tackles in the preseason. Jackson also recorded two preseason sacks to tie for the team lead in that category. DenverBroncos.com recently caught up with Jackson to talk about his adjustment to the NFL.

How difficult has the transition from college to the NFL been?

"It's been real difficult. Coming from college where you know you make the team because you know you have four years to grow, to coming here where any day they can get rid of you. You really have to be on your Ps and Qs and come out to work every day. There are no days off out here. You really just have to come to work. That's the biggest difference."

Is there one thing in particular that stands out about the NFL versus college football?

"The difference, to me, playing in the SEC, the strength might be a little bit more. You're playing with grown men. I'm 22 playing against guys that are 30-something. So the strength has a lot to do with it. And then the playbook, just how fast they just throw it on you was the biggest issue for me when I first came here for rookie OTAs. It was just kind of mind-boggling, they threw the whole book at me. It took me about a good month to get everything and now I'm good as far as the playbook goes. But the biggest thing is probably the strength and just how fast they expect you to learn stuff, because you want to come in and be that guy, be great and make no mistakes."

Do you think that playing both defensive tackle and defensive end in college was valuable?

"It's real valuable because it shows the coaches you can do more than one thing, you can be on the field for more than one reason. You have guys like (defensive tackle) Ty Warren, I have my man (defensive end) Robert Ayers, inside-outside guys who know what they're doing. It helps to have those types of guys who are seasoned vets who can help you out when you come here and give you some tips and pointers."

Were you able to benefit from playing for two years at both USC and Tennessee?

"I think so because it shows I have transition. It shows that I'm about my business. You have to make business decisions every day. Coaches do it and players do it, too. I feel like it showed that I can go somewhere else and have a new start and take advantage of it, and that's what I did."

How much has your game progressed since first arriving in Denver?

"I feel like I've come a long way, but then you always have a long way to go. Robert Ayers told me one day, 'It's a marathon, not a sprint.' You really have to take it slow every day and try to come in and work on certain stuff. Everything's just a marathon and not a sprint. You just have to take it day-by-day. You're going to make mistakes, you just have to get better."

Has defense always been your passion?

"I've just always been a defensive guy. My dad was my linebacker coach in Pop Warner. I never played any sports outside of football. I never did anything other than linebacker. I got to high school and played defense and that's all I did. I was always a defensive guy. I never even touched the offensive field."

When did you realize you could play in the NFL?

"My mom and dad told me when I was in high school that I had to earn a scholarship because they didn't have enough money to send me to college. So once I did that, I just figured that was my dream to always play in the NFL. My dad watched NFL Sunday every week. His favorite team was the Pittsburgh Steelers. I was up there watching it with him and it just kind of grew on me. I never knew I had the opportunity until I got to college and started getting these good coaches and kept learning. I really don't know when it hit me, but I just kept working for it."

How much does it add to your debut that your father is a Steelers fan?

"He's actually coming out here today. It's pretty cool for him to come out here and see his team and see his boy playing on the other team against them. He'll be pulling for the Broncos. Well, he'll be pulling for me -- I don't know if he'll be pulling for the Broncos (laughs)."

Beating the Odds

Linebacker Steven Johnson wasn't offered a college scholarship, but overcame the odds to make the team's opening-day roster as a college free agent.

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. – As a senior in high school, he led the state with 123 tackles. As a senior in college, he led the Big 12 with 124 stops.

He attended the NFL Scouting Combine and sat in front of the television waiting to see which NFL team he'd suit up for on Sundays.

On the surface, linebacker Steven Johnson followed the same path to the NFL as the majority of his counterparts.

A deeper look shows that Johnson's path, however, was far from typical.

After leading the state of Pennsylvania with 123 tackles in 2005, Johnson received offers to schools that included West Chester University, Millersville, the University of Delaware and Villanova.

Wanting to play at the Division I level, Johnson decided to enroll in prep school at Wyoming Prep Seminary in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., with the hopes of eventually landing a scholarship offer from a Division I program. There, he tore his ACL and MCL just four games into the 2006 season and any chances of a scholarship offer seemed to disappear.

After the injury, coaches told him his chances of playing again were slim and recommended he reset his goals to the Division II or Division I-AA level.

"I had to spend a lot of time rehabbing," Johnson said. "My trainers initially told me they didn't know if I could play the game again, but I fought back. My dad went and found the best doctor he could find and I've been good ever since."

Instead of listening to the advice of his former coach and trainers, Johnson pulled out his computer and emailed the recruiting coordinator at Kansas that he'd been in touch with before the injury.

"Kansas was the only school that gave me an opportunity to walk on," he said. "If it wasn't for them, I don't know where I would be. I'm just grateful that it worked out the way it did."

With Kansas being the only Division I school to show interest, Johnson enrolled in classes in Lawrence, Kan., and spent the 2007 season rehabbing his knee injury. Cleared to re-join the team on the field in 2008, Johnson appeared in two games for the Jayhawks as a freshman in 2008.

As his knee and confidence grew stronger, so did his impact on the field.

Johnson played 10 games and made nine tackles as a reserve linebacker and special teams contributor as a sophomore. It was during that sophomore season that Kansas Head Coach Mark Mangino pulled Johnson aside just before the scholarship deadline and told the walk-on that he'd be put on scholarship.

"It was right in the middle of practice, so everybody was clapping with joy and tapping me on the helmet to say congratulations," Johnson told the Big 12 Conference website. "I just wanted to take a second and cry but it was during practice and we were about to start hitting, so I knew I had to snap out of it."

Not having to worry about how he and his family would continue paying for college, Johnson was able to focus on football.

It paid off, as Johnson continued to climb up the depth chart and emerged as a starter when the 2010 season came around. He opened all 12 games for the Jayhawks and led the team with 95 tackles.

The next season, he was elected a team captain and registered double-digit tackles in 8-of-12 games to lead the Big 12 with 124 on the season.

Hoping to continue his career at the next level, Johnson eagerly awaited an invitation to the combine. When it didn't come, Johnson decided to take matters into his own hands again and contact the combine officials.

"I guess I was originally on the bubble," he said. "I was calling them just to see if I was going to get invited. They said they'd get back to me and they did – I was one of the guys that had an opportunity to go."

Despite his success at Kansas, Johnson wasn't sure when – or if – he'd be drafted. As in the past, he was just hoping that somebody would give him a chance to prove himself.

"I originally thought I was going to get drafted," Johnson said. "But, the chips fell the way they did and I was undrafted. It was just more of a chip on my shoulder."

As late rounds of the draft came and went, Johnson remained on his couch, still without a team.

At the end of the draft, Johnson's phone finally rang. And it kept ringing. Johnson estimated that around 10 different teams called him in the hopes of signing him as a college free agent.

While he was mulling those offers, his phone rang again.

This time it was his former roommate and teammate at Kansas, Broncos cornerback Chris Harris.

"I called him and told him the coaches wanted him and they were interested in him," Harris said. "I knew they would give him an opportunity to come in and make the team. That's all you can ask for."

Harris had been in Johnson's position a year ago when he joined Denver as a college free agent. Harris not only played his way onto the team's opening-day roster, but emerged as the club's nickel back midway through the season.

Harris' success gave Johnson the confidence that he'd get a fair chance to showcase his abilities in Denver.

"Chris told me, 'Hey, you need to come here,' and basically sold the whole Broncos organization – they have great facilities, great people and great coaches," Johnson said. "He knew that I'd have an opportunity to make it here, so I went with that."

After signing with Denver, Johnson still faced an uphill battle to make it to Week 1 wearing orange and blue.

Throughout training camp, Johnson turned to Harris for guidance.

"Just come in, do good on special teams and always be a high-effort guy and they should be able to see," Harris said of his advice to Johnson. "As a veteran guy now that has the experience of being an undrafted guy, I try to stay in all those guys' ears and give them motivation. You do start to wonder, 'Am I going to be able to be here,' with the numbers and stuff. It's hard sometimes."

But, given the opportunity, Johnson took full advantage of all his reps in practice and in the team's preseason games and did what he's done his entire career – produce.

He led the Broncos with 15 defensive tackles and tied for the team lead with three tackles for a loss and one forced fumble in the preseason. Johnson added one sack and also contributed on special teams, making one tackle in a role that he knew would be vital to his chances of making the roster.

"I felt like I was getting better," Johnson said of his preseason play. "Going along during the preseason, I felt like each and every game, I was trying to improve on certain things, such as moving quicker on drops and reads and stuff like that. Toward the last game, I felt pretty comfortable out there. I was making some plays. I'm just looking forward to keep getting better."

While he felt good about the way the preseason went, Johnson knew that he still faced long odds to make the 53-man roster.

"When you're an undrafted free agent, you feel good, but at the same time, it's like 'I don't know,'" he said. "You never know what can happen in this business. I felt like I went out there and put my best foot forward."

Denver wrapped up its preseason on Thursday, Aug. 30 and had to cut its 75-man roster down to 53 by 5 p.m. MT the next day.

As the hours passed between the final snap of Thursday's game and the cut deadline, Johnson nervously awaited his fate.

"I was listening to a lot of music, sitting in my room, just staring at the ceiling," he said. "Friday, when we got here, I was just scared. My heart was beating the whole time. I didn't want to look anybody in the eye."

Of the 470 undrafted players that signed with NFL teams immediately following the draft, only 42 made opening-day rosters.

One of those 42 was Johnson, as he helped extend the Broncos' streak of college free agents making the active roster out of training camp to nine consecutive seasons.

When he found out he'd made the roster, he immediately called his dad, who had sacrificed financially to help Johnson earn his opportunity as a walk-on at Kansas.

"Dad got the first call," Johnson said. "He was excited at first, and then he started crying. I was like 'Man, my dad's crying.' It was weird. I've never seen my dad literally cry, but he was very excited. And I called my mom, and she was very excited, and my whole family found out. They're just very excited with joy that I made my dream come true."

Harris learned of the news when he arrived at the facility Friday and saw Johnson's nameplate still hanging above his locker.

"It's very hard to make the team as an undrafted player," Harris said. "So I was very excited for him."

Each step in his career has been difficult for Johnson. At any point, his career could have come to an end due to a lack of opportunities.

Now that he's made the initial roster, Johnson knows that nothing is guaranteed.

"I know when I got on scholarship, my roommate said, 'Oh, you got on scholarship, now you have everything to lose,'" Johnson recalled. "I was like, 'I felt like I just got so much more to gain, I just want to keep going.' Now that I'm on the team, I just want to keep going up from here. My goal is to be a Pro Bowl linebacker one day and (Linebackers) Coach (Richard) Smith is a great coach. He's busting my chops every day trying to get me right."

Although his path to the NFL was unconventional, Johnson continued to overcome obstacles and earn his roster spot.

"I couldn't stop smiling," Johnson said. "I kind of did it again, you know. Being a college free agent is kind of like being a walk-on. I beat those odds twice."

Throughout his life, he's taken his chances and run with them. There's no reason to think that trend won't continue at his highest level yet.

"I used to think it didn't get any better than Friday nights," Johnson said. "Then when I went to college, it was all about Saturday. And now it's Sunday, so I'm like, 'Oh, maybe Sunday is better.' I'm just excited for the opportunity."

Notebook: Leonhard Happy to be Back

Tyler Everett
DenverBroncos.com

Safety Jim Leonhard is excited for his return to the field Sunday night against the Pittsburgh Steelers, the Broncos name their captains and Derek Wolfe anticipates his NFL debut.

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. – Jim Leonhard doesn't know exactly what his role will be in the Broncos' season opener Sunday night against the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Regardless, being on the field for kickoff will be a special personal moment for Leonhard, who spent the offseason recovering from a knee injury he suffered last December.

"It's been a rough end to the last couple of years for me," Leonhard said. "To get back on that field, it's going to mean a lot to me, in a live, regular-season game. I'm excited. I don't care what my job is, however many snaps I'm going to get this week, it means a lot to me to get back on the field."

Leonhard, who arrived in Denver after compiling 309 tackles and 60 starts during seven seasons with the Buffalo Bills, Baltimore Ravens and New York Jets, brings a veteran safety presence to the Broncos' defense. Having played with elite defenders like Darrelle Revis of the Jets and Ed Reed and Ray Lewis of the Ravens, Leonhard knows what it takes for a defense to be successful. He said that the best defenses win most of their battles before the ball is ever snapped.

"I think the biggest thing is just emphasizing communication and pre-snap recognition," Leonhard said. "All the great defenses I've been around have had that. Sometimes it takes young guys a little bit of time to realize that that's where the game is won and lost. It's not just the Xs and Os of what your job is, it's recognizing something pre-snap and then going and making a play. Especially on the back end, you have a chance to really change the game."

Leonhard sees the potential for a strong season out of the Broncos' D.

"There's a ton of talent, there's a lot of young talent on this team and you add that to the guys up front that can just flat out get to the quarterback," Leonhard said. "That's a dangerous thing, especially this year hoping that (quarterback) Peyton (Manning) can do his job and put some points on the board. You get ahead of some teams early and force them into obvious passing situations and kind of let this defense loose, I think we can do some good things."

In addition to a solid cast of teammates including perennial Pro Bowl cornerback Champ Bailey, Leonhard has enjoyed working with Defensive Coordinator Jack Del Rio.

"It's always great to have a coordinator with a ton of experience," Leonhard said. "He's a guy who had been a head coach, so he understands both sides of the ball" and how they work off of each other. I think his experience is going to be huge for this group this year."

With a promising defense and an offense led by one of the top quarterbacks in league history in Manning, the Broncos enter 2012 with high expectations. Leonhard wouldn't have it any other way.

"I would rather be nowhere else than here," Leonhard said. "You want high expectations as a player. You don't want to go into a season with the media saying, 'If they're good, they'll be 7-9 or 8-8.' You want high expectations. You want to be able to go into a season knowing that you're going to make a run. And we feel that way here. Obviously you have to get it done. We have a tough schedule. You take them one at a time but we feel like we're going to be in this thing at the end."

FIVE BRONCOS HONORED AS CAPTAINS

Linebacker Wesley Woodyard prides himself on setting a good example for his teammates. For the fourth time in his career, dating back to his rookie season, Woodyard was again recognized for his leadership with the honor of being one of the Broncos' five team captains.

"I just want to continue to uphold what a true Bronco is," Woodyard said. "That's going out there, playing hard and being a true leader."

"It's somebody that's always out there putting it all out on the field," Woodyard continued. "Every play, giving it their all, leading by example, doing the right things every time. You can't have a bad day and you can't have a day off."

The Broncos' other 2012 captains are quarterback Peyton Manning, guard Chris Kuper, cornerback Champ Bailey and defensive end Elvis Dumervil. Running back Willis McGahee will serve as an interim captain while Kuper recovers from injury. Bailey and Kuper are both entering at least their third seasons as Broncos captains, and Manning was a captain his last 10 seasons in Indianapolis.

Rookie defensive lineman Derek Wolfe said Dumervil was named a captain for the first time thanks to his work ethic and willingness to give advice to younger players.

"He does all the little things right," Wolfe said. "He plays hard and doesn't complain. Whenever you need advice, he gives it to you. He's one of the best leaders I've ever been around."

WOLFE READY FOR DEBUT

Wolfe's been anticipating his NFL debut, which kicks off Sunday night against the Pittsburgh Steelers, for as long as he can remember.

"I've been preparing a long time for this," Wolfe said. "My whole life, I've been preparing for (Sunday). Obviously, (it's against) Pittsburgh. I grew up 45 minutes from Pittsburgh, so it's going to be a fun game."

Wolfe's rise to the top of the depth chart at defensive end before his first game as a rookie is something a lot of players would take pride in. But Wolfe expects himself to be much more than just a placeholder along the defensive line.

"Now it really counts," Wolfe said. "We've seen flashes of how good we really can be, so now we can get it going for four quarters and see how great we can actually be out there. I expect to be the best, and I demand nothing but greatness of myself. Being anything less than a contributor is a failure for me."

Though he plays alongside a handful of veterans in tackles Ty Warren and Justin Bannan and fellow end Elvis Dumervil, Wolfe knows that their advice will only take him so far on game day.

"A couple guys have said something to me, but what kind of advice can they give you?" Wolfe said. "Just go out there and play football, that's all they can tell you."

Woody Paige: Peyton Manning still a state treasure in Tennessee

Woody Paige
The Denver Post
September 16, 2012

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — The street leading from Circle Park to Neyland Stadium is not paved with gold.

It's much more precious than that.

Two massive orange-and-white checkerboard patterns and a gigantic "T," symbolic of the Volunteers' football team, are painted on the walkway Saturday afternoon.

Welcome to "Peyton Manning Pass."

In 2005, the University of Tennessee retired Manning's No. 16 (16?) and, for the first time in school history, the city permanently named a block in honor of a former student-athlete.

Peyton was a special student — graduating (in three years) with a 3.61 grade-point average in speech communications (and being honored as a Phi Beta Kappa) — and a special athlete who set 33 records (in four seasons) as the Vols' greatest quarterback ever.

Manning is not forgotten here.

More than 100,000 orange-clad fanatics strolled along Manning's memory lane Saturday afternoon before Tennessee played notable nemesis Florida.

Manning, who now plays for another orange team, is everywhere and everything in Knoxville.

Current UT quarterback Tyler Bray is outstanding, but he's no Peyton Manning.

The state cherishes its folk heroes: Davy Crockett wore a coonskin cap, "killed him a b'ar when he was only 3," was the first "volunteer" and went off to die at the Alamo; Elvis Presley was the first king of rock 'n' roll and sang of a "hound dog" (Tennessee's mascot is Smoky, a bluetick coonhound); Sgt. Alvin York, a Tennessee farm boy, won the Medal of Honor in World War I after he saved his platoon by single-handedly killing 28 German soldiers and capturing 132 others; and Dolly Parton, born in a cabin in the Smokies near Knoxville as one of 12 children, is the "Queen of Country Music" and has her own theme park, "Dollywood."

Then, there is Peyton Manning, the most state's most prominent athlete.

He just threw his 400th NFL touchdown pass — for the Broncos last Sunday night. He wears No. 18 now.

At the Sheraton Hotel near the base of "The Hill" (the center of the Tennessee campus), a framed, signed, authentic Manning jersey hangs in the lobby, and Volunteers stopped to genuflect at the shrine Saturday morning.

When a visitor admitted he was from Denver, one man said:

"Peyton's our boy. You don't go lettin' him get hurt out there in them mountains, you hear? How's his neck? How's he doin'?"

Fine, thank you.

Jeff Heygood, president of the Knoxville Quarterback Club, stops by the hotel and says: "Me and some ol' boys are driving to Atlanta Monday to see Peyton. There'll be a ton of traffic on the road from Knoxville to Georgia.

"We've all become Denver Broncos fans here now. Your color is orange too."

Peyton has told me the best decisions he made in his life were to choose Tennessee as his school and returning for his senior year.

Steve Spurrier, then the Florida coach, said upon hearing of Peyton's decision to play one more year: "Good for him. He'll become the first quarterback to play in three Citrus Bowls. You can't spell 'citrus' without UT." Spurrier, son of an east Tennessee preacher, briefly was a Broncos quarterback in the 1977 preseason.

En route to the stadium on "The Strip" is the Goalpost Tavern. On the wall is a Manning jersey, but, more interesting, somebody has stolen a "Peyton Manning Pass" sign and stuck it in a corner.

Manning's likeness is in the window of Papa John's Pizza — partially because he (Peyton, not Papa John) is idolized here, partially because Manning is the national commercial spokesman for the chain.

A 10-year-old girl, holding her mother's hand, is among hundreds wearing a No. 16 orange jersey. She wasn't even alive when Manning starred here from 1994-97. As a freshman, Manning was third-string, but took over when a guy named Todd Helton was injured. Whatever happened to Helton?

Only problem was, Manning didn't beat Florida in three tries.

Yet, he played for the national championship as a senior against Nebraska and lost. Whatever happened to Nebraska?

So, Peyton never won the title or the Heisman Trophy (placing second to Michigan defensive back Charles Woodson, where upon the state legislature passed a resolution condemning the outcome).

But Manning has had a pretty good career, anyway. And Manning visits Knoxville often — in June for his golf tournament that raised $150,000 for a local hospital, and he will be back Oct. 20 (the Broncos' bye weekend) when the Vols play another nemesis — Alabama.

Manning is co-owner of the Sheraton.

Denver and the Rocky Mountains must share Peyton with Knoxville and Rocky Top.

"Why, that room you're staying in," the man at the front desk told me Saturday.
"Peyton Manning slept right there."

Peyton Manning talks

Rick Reilly

August 3, 2012

Peyton Manning has been a disaster so far on drives as a Denver Bronco.

The other night, for instance, he left his new house in Cherry Hills to go downtown and drove for 10 minutes the wrong way on I-25 before he figured it out.

"In Indianapolis, I'd go south on the interstate to go downtown, but here, it's north," the Broncos' new QB shrugs. "Seems like every day there's something new to learn. New plays, new players, new city. People ask me if I'm settled in yet. No way, not even close."

Then there's the New Jersey thing. Seeing Peyton Manning in his new Broncos jersey is like seeing Donald Trump in a Greenpeace T-shirt. You want to ask him if he's been Photoshopped.

"Before I'd even put it on, they wanted me to sign a bunch of them," Manning says. "And I'm like, 'Can I just sweat in it first? You know, half letter in it? Just seemed weird.'"

And then this, which is even more upside down: While everybody in Denver squirms waiting to see whether Manning's four-times-operated-on neck will hold up when he gets hit hard for the first time in 19 months, Manning himself can hardly wait.

"I'd like to get it over with," he says. "I really would. I'd kinda just like [Chicago Bears linebacker Brian] Urlacher or somebody to get a good clean shot and just lay me out. Kind of shake the cobwebs out. So I can get up and go, 'Yeah, OK. I'm ready now.' And at least Urlacher wouldn't use me like a footstool to get up, either."

The Broncos start the preseason at the Bears next week, 7:30 p.m. CT. Would 7:45 be convenient, Mr. Urlacher?

Yes, linebackers of the world. Dreams do come true.

We are through the looking glass here, people. After 14 years in Indianapolis, Manning didn't just change horses in midstream -- Colts to Broncos -- he changed languages. For instance, sometimes a receiver will come back to the huddle and ask him about a route. Manning, in a hurry, will answer him entirely in Colts lingo.

"And he'll just kind of stand there looking at me."

Manning has language on the brain lately. A few weeks back, at a golf tournament at Cherry Hills Country Club, he snuck away with the iPhone of a buddy of mine and changed all the fonts to Chinese. The guy was three hours trying to figure out how to get it back. Maybe Manning just wanted him to know how he feels lately?

Fans seem confused, too. Manning signs every day after practice at Broncos headquarters, even if it's not the quarterbacks' day to sign. He never misses.

"But never in my life did I think I'd be handed a John Elway jersey to sign. And the kid's already got John's signature on it. I tried to talk him out of it. 'Kid, I'm just going to ruin the value. I'm serious.' But he made me sign it anyway."

If Manning does what Elway hopes he does, what Elway and the Broncos gave him $96 million to do, win a Super Bowl, then that jersey might be worth more than a 16-year-old could know how to spend.

"He's come a long way since [he first threw for Elway in March at] Duke," says Elway, the team's executive vice president of football operations. "The ball pops coming out of his hand every time now. It wasn't that consistent at Duke."

So why'd The Duke give him $96 million?

"Because I knew he'd get the ball to them one way or another," Elway laughs. "He always has."

He got it to them plenty Thursday at Broncos camp in front of a record 5,000-plus fans. I counted Manning as 15-for-16 in the live 7-on-7 and 11-on-11 drills. For Broncos faithful, it was like a gully-washer after a yearlong drought. Tim Tebow could go a week and not hit 15 passes.

I asked Manning whether he notices his golf ball going 7 percent farther at a mile high. "Yeah, but I wish it went that much farther for footballs," Manning replies. "I could use an extra 10 yards. I'm 36 years old."

Manning seems to love the new air he breathes. He's got a Colorado driver's license, has already registered to vote and has moved into his new 16,000-square-foot home.

But since he arrived, the Colorado news sections have been full of disaster and death. First came the wildfires that left more than 300 homes in ashes. Then came the "Batman" mass murder of 12 at a Century 16 theater in nearby Aurora.

"I'm trying to figure out ways I can help," Manning says with a sigh. "It's been tough." He called two of the moms of the slain theater victims to offer sympathy.

"You know, I learned something through this whole [neck] injury thing. People would call or text and say, 'Hey, we're thinking of you. You're in our prayers.' And at first I was like, 'Nah, I'm fine. I'm good. Don't worry about me.' But after a while, I learned to appreciate what they were saying. They were taking time out to let you know they were worried about you. They meant it. They cared. And you start to be grateful for it. And so I try to do more of that now.

"But as a parent, I can't imagine. I'm lucky. I got the greatest blessing a person can have -- twins. [Mosley, a boy, and Marshall, a girl, are 16 months old.] God gave me that gift. So I didn't need the injury to remind me how lucky I am. I realize how lucky I am every day."

Upstairs, in his office, Elway must feel the same way. He watches Manning below, on his practice field, looking as Peyton Manning as he ever did, and grins.

"Everybody looks at him and goes, 'I just can't get used to seeing him in that jersey,'" Elway says. "But I can. I look at him and think, 'He looks like he's been wearing that thing his whole career.' But I guess I would. I wanted him in it so badly."

Broncos Q&A: Linebacker Joe Mays glad to be able to return to Denver

Lindsay H. Jones
The Denver Post
September 16, 2012

Editor's note: Each Sunday throughout the season, The Denver Post's Broncos reporters help readers get to know the players on a more personal level.

Joe Mays was sitting on an airplane parked at a gate at the New Orleans airport last March when he learned he was coming home. Mays was in the middle of what was supposed to be a two-city NFL free-agent tour, with stops in New Orleans and Indianapolis. But when Denver called, those courtships were over. Mays wanted to remain a Bronco, and the Broncos wanted Mays to remain their starting middle linebacker. Now in his third year with the Broncos, Mays has developed from a special-teams player into one of the vocal leaders of the defense.

Q: Take me back to March and the free-agent process. How stressful was that time? Were you worried you might not end up back here?

A: It wasn't stressful at all. It was kind of fun. I was open to just about anything. In the back of my mind, I knew I wanted to be a Bronco. For my wife, it was (stressful). I had to make sure that I stayed strong for her. For a while, I thought I was the wife, she was the player, because she was stressing about where I'd play.

Q: Still, it must have been a relief to get that call from the Broncos.

A: Oh, yeah. For the first time since I've been in the league, I was able to buy a house. You just feel stable. Now you're able to settle down, enjoy your life. I plan on being here for a while.

Q: How often do you reflect on the trade with the Eagles that sent you to the Broncos in the first place, back during training camp in 2010?

A: It was the best thing that ever happened to me. If I would have stayed there, I wouldn't have made the team. I would have been cut. I came in as a special-teams guy, but I was able to show them what I can do and work my way up the ladder. It was definitely a blessing. At first I didn't want to accept it. But after coming out here, it was definitely the best thing.

Q: As a starting linebacker, your on-field role has changed. Has anything about the way you approach the game changed as well?

A: As far as my attitude, my attitude stays the same. I'm always coming out to prove to everyone and to myself that I can make this team and be a starter.

Q: I doubt that you are harder on yourself than other players are, but you are always brutally honest publicly about the way you play, good or bad. Why is that?

A: It's being accountable to yourself, your teammates and letting the truth show. You guys watched it. No reason to sugarcoat. I like people to be blunt with me. I'd rather be blunt than sugarcoat anything.

Q: What was it like having officials from your alma mater, North Dakota State, here watching practice recently?

A: That was my athletic director. It reminded me of when I first got into college. He set me straight on my grades, made sure I was eligible to play football. It made me think about where I came from. When I got there, I was a boy. I grew into a man, and now I'm in the position I'm in.

Q: How much pride did you take in watching your school beat Colorado State last weekend?

A: It was burning me that I couldn't drive up there, because it was right here in Colorado. The Bison, they did what I was telling everyone they were going to do. You hear guys talking about SEC schools, the Pac-12 or whatever. I felt great I was able to brag about my I-AA school and how good we're doing.

Joe Mays file

Position: Middle linebacker

Age: 27

Hometown: Chicago

College: North Dakota State

Draft: Sixth round by Philadelphia in 2008

Experience: 45 total games, 21 starts (including postseason)

2012 stats: Mays made two tackles and recorded half a sack last weekend against Pittsburgh.

Personal: Mays and his wife, LaToya, have a daughter (Joi) and a son (Jai) — and a 6-month-old Great Dane puppy.

THE REAL GOOD GUYS

Bad news makes the news. Good news rarely does.

For the same reason local TV stations don't send a correspondent to DIA because every plane landed safely there in a given day or SportsCenter doesn't have Rachel Nichols reporting that no pro athlete got a DUI that night, good news doesn't often make the airwaves, unless things are slow or papers or TV channels desperately need something to kill space or time with.

But amidst the seemingly endless stream of suspended, drug-abusing and jail-bound athletes that scroll across the bottom of your TV screens every day, there are legitimately good people who play professional sports. In fact, there are lots of them.

And right here in Colorado, there are two shining examples.

They always say you know who your friends are when you need help. Denver South running back Phillip Lindsay, a University of Colorado commitment for next fall, needed a friend after tearing his ACL last month, ending his senior season only midway through September.

The fifth-ranked recruit in the state (per Rivals.com) was understandably down and worried about his future after experiencing such a severe injury.

But despite being one of Colorado's premier high school football talents, there was no way Lindsay could've guessed what would happen next.

Exactly 24 hours after Lindsay's ACL surgery last Wednesday, the high schooler looked down at his phone and had a call from a random number.

It was Broncos running back Willis McGahee.

"It's a big deal for someone like that to give me a call," Lindsay told Mile High Sports last Friday. "(He suffered knee) injuries and he's playing in the NFL right now, so it's big. He's making sure my spirits are still high."

Many will remember McGahee's horrific knee injury in the 2003 Fiesta Bowl, where a hit from Ohio State safety Will Allen shattered McGahee's knee - and draft stock - in the fourth quarter of the national title game that year. McGahee needed several surgeries before returning to football, where he was selected 23rd overall by the Buffalo Bills in the 2003 draft.

Since that injury, all McGahee has done is rack up four 1,000-yard seasons, two Pro Bowls and serve as a role model for others who have encountered similar hardships. Not too shabby.

After fellow Broncos running back Knowshon Moreno tore his ACL last November in Kansas City, McGahee helped counsel and mentor the much-maligned former first-round pick. Moreno wound up making the Broncos' roster this season despite a fierce training camp battle for a spot in the team's backfield.

Now, Lindsay is the latest recipient of McGahee's words of motivation. Lindsay said that McGahee plans to call him once a week indefinitely, when the Broncos' starting running back will offer words of advice about recovering from the injury that nearly took down his own career.

"He's just making sure he's praying for me and everything else," Lindsay said. "We're going to continue to get a bond."

It's the kind of story you don't see often in the money-driven, ego-laden and stat-oriented professional sports world that we live in and are so often reminded of. But McGahee is choosing to pay it forward to a high school kid, when nobody would have asked or criticized him had he not chosen to pick up the phone.

McGahee - who hasn't been in the headlines for the wrong reasons during his nine-year NFL career - is just one example of an athlete who does things the right way. As for Lindsay's commitment to CU, you might ask? The Colorado kid is staying loyal to Colorado, despite the Buffaloes' less-than-promising start to the season.

"I'm 100 percent CU Buffs," Lindsay said. "It doesn't matter if they're losing by 100. I made a commitment and they made a commitment to me. That's a big-time thing to know they care about me, not just as an athlete, but as a person."

It wouldn't be hard to blame Lindsay for flirting elsewhere. According to Rivals.com, he had at least one other Pac-12 offer from Utah and was picking up interest from other notable D-1 programs, as well.

But like the Miami-born and -bred McGahee, Lindsay is staying loyal to his hometown school. Perhaps Lindsay is starting to learn from his new mentor.

The next time you see the next inevitable headline flash about a player doing the wrong thing, remember athletes like Willis McGahee and Phillip Lindsay who act the right way.

Even if you don't read about it or see it.

Miller Named Colorado Athlete of the Year

Sam Davis

June 15, 2012

DENVER -- On Friday, linebacker Von Miller added another award to his resume.

The 2011 Defensive Rookie of the Year was honored as the Denver Athletic Club's Colorado Athlete of the Year at the 37th Annual Awards Banquet Friday night in downtown Denver. He joined a few former Broncos who have also received the award, including John Elway, Champ Bailey and Rod Smith.

"It's an award that came from here in Colorado," Miller said. "It's always great to get awards and accolades but I think it shows the type of team we had and the type of teammates and coaches that I had. I'm very appreciative to have those guys and I'm very appreciative for the award."

In his rookie season, Miller tallied 64 tackles with 11.5 sacks and two forced fumbles en route to a Pro Bowl selection.

The former Texas A&M Aggie and his family attended the ceremony, where he mingled with some of the guests and took pictures. He said the award is special to him because of where it comes from – a state where he's lived for barely a year, but one he now calls home.

"It's special coming from Colorado, being a Texas guy," Miller said. "It feels great to have this type of impact on the community."

Another man was honored Friday night that Denver Broncos fans are very familiar with. Dave Logan, "The Voice Of The Broncos", was given the Career Achievement Award. Logan played in the NFL for nine seasons (1976-1984) and has been the play-by-play commentator for the Broncos for more than 15 years. He and former Major League Baseball player Dave Winfield are the only two athletes to be drafted by the NBA, NFL, and MLB.

Like Miller, Logan credited his teammates for the accolade.

"To me, it signifies that I've been blessed in so many ways," Logan said. "I've had such great support staff, whether as an athlete, a broadcaster, a coach, you simply have to step back and acknowledge that you couldn't achieve those things by yourself without great people around you. It allows me to take that step back and acknowledge how much support I've had."

Logan spoke of the Miller as a player with incredible potential who he looks forward to watching for years to come.

"I'm excited about Von's career," Logan said. "Such a great player as a rookie. I think he has that kind of ability to turn into a once-in-a-decade or once-in-a-15-year player. I'm anxious to see him continue to develop, but what a great, great player in his first year.

The Athlete of the Year ceremony also honored six Denver Athletic Club athletes and the Denver Post/9News High School Student Athletes of the Year

Ready For Moore

By Sam Davis
DenverBroncos.com
June 7, 2012

Second year safety Rahim Moore is making the most out of his first full offseason.

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. -- Rahim Moore believes this year will be different.

The second-year safety started the first five games of his rookie campaign last year but his playing time diminished in the second half of the season.

"I think (last year) was one of the only years I went with no production, and that's not something I looked forward to going into my rookie season," said Moore, who had 31 tackles, a pick, two pass breakups and a fumble recovery in 2011. "I wanted to play better, but I think I needed that. It's driven me now to want to compete and to have a better season and be able to help the team win."

Due to the NFL lockout, Moore had an almost non-existent offseason as a rookie. This year, he's looking forward to putting a full summer of practices and workouts under his belt to make him a smarter, more consistent player.

"I missed having OTAs last season," Moore said. "It was like I was thrown into the fire. I was antsy, but at the same time, I was second-guessing myself sometimes. When the game did slow down for me, it seemed like it didn't. I thought it did, but it didn't. A lot of times, I was unsure of what I was doing. I showed some signs of ability, but as the year went on, I wore down my body. This year during the offseason, I worked on getting stronger and getting in better shape."

Fourteen-year veteran Champ Bailey knows how tough it can be for a rookie to miss out on OTAs.

"Coming in last year, all they had was training camp," Bailey said of the two rookie safeties, Moore and Quinton Carter. "I couldn't imagine how it would've been for anybody else doing that, especially at safety. There's a lot to learn. Now they know what they need to do to be successful, it's just going out and getting the work in."

Even with his struggles last season that put him behind Carter on the depth chart, new Defensive Coordinator Jack Del Rio has said that safeties Mike Adams, Moore and Carter are all battling for the two starting safety positions this offseason.

Just as several other defensive backs have said in recent weeks, Moore believes the competition will improve the overall quality of play.

"We're like brothers back there and we help each other out," he said. "And that's what it's all about and that's what's going to make our team better. That's what (Head) Coach (John) Fox wants us to do, to compete."

Hoping to secure one of those spots, Moore has his priorities in line for the summer. It all starts with building on his experience from last year.

"It's just learning from my old experience so when the opportunity comes, or when that time comes you know how to handle it," Moore said. "Also my conditioning, my work ethic, I know that I put the work in. I was always told what you do in the offseason is going to show in season. It's not like last year I didn't work hard, but I was just new to everything. So this year, like I said, I'm excited and looking forward to helping this team win and being a part of the process."

To expedite the growing pains, Moore mentions a particular veteran in the Broncos secondary who's been especially helpful.

"I think God has truly blessed me with a guy like (cornerback) Drayton Florence," Moore said. "He's helped me out so much, in ways words can't explain. He's shown me some things that I've never known, that I thought I knew, but really, it was wrong. He's helped me out so much. He's been like a big brother to me."

Regardless of whether it's Moore or Carter – or both – who earn a starting spot to begin the 2012 season, Coach Fox is confident the production at the position will be at a much higher level this time around.

"The second time around, their sophomore season, (Moore and Carter) feel way more comfortable," Coach Fox said. "Again, you have to develop a pro body. This game is twice as long as the college game when you figure in the preseason as well as the playoffs. It takes a while. They are much further along and much more comfortable the second time around."

Denver Broncos training camp 'surreal' for QB Brock Osweiler

Doug Haller
The Republic
July 30, 2012

When a hectic pace slows in Englewood, Colo., where the Denver Broncos hold training camp, former Arizona State quarterback Brock Osweiler thinks back to where he was a year ago, and he can't help but be amazed.

"In fact, (former ASU receiver) Gerell Robinson is my roommate here at training camp, and we talk about that sometimes," Osweiler said in a telephone interview. "One year ago we were getting ready for fall camp at ASU, and there was so much anticipation for the season and we were talking Rose Bowl and there was a lot of excitement. But then that season flew by, the whole training process went by, and now I'm in football camp with the Denver Broncos. It's pretty surreal."

Surreal, indeed.

On April 27, the Broncos selected Osweiler, the only ASU quarterback to throw for 4,000 yards in a season, with the NFL draft's 57th pick. Since then, the quarterback has hung out with rapper Snoop Dogg, signed a four-year contract worth about $3.5 million and possibly jumped to No. 2 on Denver's depth chart behind Peyton Manning.

"I really couldn't be in a better situation," said Osweiler, who not only gets to learn from Manning but also Hall of Fame quarterback John Elway, who is the executive vice president of football operations with the Broncos. "I have absolutely no regret of leaving school (after his junior season). Just to be here, around my teammates and the coaching staff, and be a part of a great community, it truly is a great situation and I'm thankful for it."

Osweiler, 21, finished off-season team activities fourth on Denver's depth chart behind Manning, Adam Weber and Caleb Hanie, but on Sunday he earned reps with the second team. Osweiler realizes that the coaching staff likely is just testing him to see how much he can handle, but he embraces the opportunity. For now, he said his goal is to just learn the playbook and get as high on the depth chart as possible. He knows he has to be patient. He insists he's prepared.

"Fortunately, I've been in this situation before," Osweiler said. "My freshman year at ASU, we pretty much knew that Danny (Sullivan) was going to be the starter, so I just take those experiences and transfer them to here. I have been a backup before. I understand you still need to approach the game just like you were the starter. You need to get better every day. You need to study film. Your head needs to be in the playbook. Every rep counts at practice, even though you're not getting as many."

Manning, signed in the off-season, has been helpful. Osweiler said anytime he has a question, whether on the field or in a meeting, the four-time league MVP has been happy to answer. And if Manning sees something Osweiler is doing wrong, he doesn't hesitate to point it out. The biggest lesson the rookie has learned from Manning:

"How when you come to work, no matter what time you arrive in the morning and no matter what time you leave at night, you never waste a minute," Osweiler said. "He truly knows how to utilize every minute of the day."

Since draft day, Osweiler has had several "Welcome to the NFL" moments, but not all have come on the field. Earlier this month, he attended the ESPYs -- ESPN's annual awards show -- in Los Angeles. A couple of months earlier, he hung out with Snoop Dogg at a Lakers playoff game, his photo with the rap star popping up on the Internet.

"I was out in LA for the NFL Rookie Premiere, and my agent was able to get Trent Richardson, myself and (Robert Griffin III) tickets to the game," Osweiler said. "We bumped into Snoop Dogg, and he invited us up to his (luxury) box for the second half. Yeah, that was one of those (welcome) moments, but there have been a lot of things."

During camp, Osweiler will try to absorb as much as he can. Some NFL rookies say the biggest difference from college to pro is the game's speed. Osweiler disagrees.

"Without a doubt, it's all the information," he said. "The playbook is very thick. There are a lot of details that go into it. And those fine details that maybe you can kind of skip over in college and still be a great player, you can't skip over in this league and be successful. There's so much that goes into every play, whether it's a pass or a run that the quarterback needs to know. Once I get the mental game down, I think it'll be very similar to college."

5th Down: The Porter Profile

Connor Grant
303 Magazine
September 5, 2012

Living in a state that ranks fourth in the nation in craft breweries, most people in Colorado hear “Porter” and their minds and taste buds immediately race to the dark, London-style beer, especially the Graham Cracker Porter from Denver Beer Company — it tastes like a campfire. But, raise your glasses Denver, there is a new Porter in town — Tracy Porter, starting cornerback for the Denver Broncos, Traditionally, one pairs porters with barbeque, but for best results, pair this Porter with Champ Bailey.

Focused on basketball throughout high school, Porter wasn’t persuaded to come out for the football team until a weightlifting session his junior year. He stepped out on the football field for a 7 on 7 drill and never looked back, soon after accepting a scholarship from Indiana University. Following a decorated career at Indiana — including a first team all Big Ten season as a senior — Porter found himself high on many team’s wish lists for the 2008 NFL Draft. Mix in an excellent scouting combine highlighted by a 4.37 forty-yard dash time, (think Porsche 911 GT2 RS fast) and Porter raced up draft boards.

After pre draft visits to every team in the NFC South, Porter nestled in with his family and friends at home in Louisiana for Draft Day. Early in the second round, Porter got a call from a 540 number. Sneaking away from the crowd focused intently on the TV, he took the call and found out he would be playing for his hometown team, the New Orleans Saints. Somehow, he managed not to tell anyone making for a huge surprise for everyone gathered in the room when the Saints announced their pick on TV.

Following a successful four years with the Saints, including a Super Bowl ring and a semi-famous interception, Porter hit free agency looking for a change. As most of us know, the mountains have a strange gravity pulling people towards them. Paired with a future Hall of Fame quarterback, wildly devoted fans, Jack “Suit” Del Rio, and an opportunity to play alongside living legend Champ Bailey, he couldn’t have asked for a better situation. Porter fits in well to the Broncos secondary with his elite speed, tenacity, and crazy haircuts and should be the complement to Bailey that Denver has lacked in recent seasons.

Off the field, Porter exemplifies character. In 2010, he founded the Pick 6 Foundation. Their mission aims to combat childhood obesity through developing healthy eating habits and an active lifestyle. Porter all too often saw kids inheriting poor eating habits from their elders then going home and playing video games rather than going outside and playing. The organization continues its work in Louisiana, but even in his short time here Porter has already made a trip to the Boys and Girls Club of San Luis Valley to speak with the kids about his mission. The foundation will continue to grow its reach and impact on Colorado communities in the coming months.

Philanthropy aside, Porter prides himself on being devoted family man. Immediately after signing his rookie contract, he bought his mother a house. With the help of his brother and sister, they orchestrated a grand scheme to surprise her by driving through a neighborhood, pulling into a random driveway, then popping out of the front door. He is looking forward to enjoying more time outside with his wife and daughter taking advantage of Colorado's sunny days and lack of humidity. His favorite part of the day is coming home to his daughter who runs to the door as soon as she hears him enter and clings tightly to his leg.

This fall, Denver will have two Porters to love.

Fun fact – Tracy Porter earned his degree from Indiana University in four years while playing football.

Matt Prater's new Broncos deal a long way from nearly being cut by Shanahan

Jeff Legwold
The Denver Post
July 3, 2012

When the Broncos signed kicker Matt Prater to a new four-year, $13 million deal Monday, it was a testament to how far Prater has come in the NFL.

After all, he had been released by three different teams — Lions, Dolphins and Falcons — before he even arrived in Denver late in the 2007 season and there was a moment in the 2008 season when then-head coach Mike Shanahan was talking about bringing in a replacement if Prater missed any more gameday kicks.

Prater had a four-game stretch in 2008 — Prater's first full season with the Broncos — when he missed at least one kick in each of four consecutive games in the season's second half, including two against the Raiders when quarterback Jay Cutler went as far as to get in Prater's face after one of the misses. By late November Prater had the rather quirky stat line of being 5-for-5 at that point on kicks of at least 50 yards, but a shaky 3-for-7 showing between 40-49 yards. Shanahan was then asked in the days leading up to an early December trip to New Jersey to face the Jets what could be done to repair Prater's confidence for the final month of that season and said with a smile:

"Bring in another kicker."

Shanahan added:

"That's what you call tough love. You see if the mental gets better, and if it doesn't, you've got somebody else in. It's like he's got the weight of the world on his shoulders. He's just got to work through it."

It appears Prater did just that.

Q&A with Brandon Stokley

Sam Davis
DenverBroncos.com
August 22, 2012

Wide receiver Brandon Stokley talks about reuniting with quarterback Peyton Manning, playing for Head Coach John Fox and his relationship with the Broncos' young receivers.

Editor's Note: This Q&A was published in the 9/18 Gameday program, when the Broncos took on the Seattle Seahawks.

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. -- Wide receiver Brandon Stokley joined the Broncos in April after mulling over a possible retirement from the league. Now in his second stint in orange and blue, Stokley is excited to contribute to the new-look Denver offense.

Is it crazy to you how you went from considering retirement to on the verge of entering your 14th NFL season?

"It is. I was thinking about retiring not because I was ready to retire, it was more so because I didn't think I'd get another opportunity from another team. Six months later, here I am practicing and playing with Peyton Manning again. It's pretty remarkable to me."

What did it feel like to find out you'd have another shot at playing football?

"I didn't know if it was going to happen or not. When it finally did happen, it's a great feeling. But you haven't really accomplished anything yet until you make the team. Until you make the team, nothing's accomplished."

As a veteran, how do you use the preseason to carve out your role with the team?

"The preseason for me is like a Super Bowl. Every game is like a Super Bowl. Every practice is like a Super Bowl. That's my mindset going into this whole training camp and preseason games and the regular season. Every time I step out on the field, it's a chance for me to try to make the team and earn a spot and earn some playing time."

What type of relationship do you have with the younger receivers on the squad?

"I help those guys out as much as possible and try to help their careers. Anything that I can talk to them about and show them on the football field, I try to do. I remember when I was that age, older guys always helped me out and I appreciated it. I feel like that's one of my roles now – to help them and help them grow in their careers. Whenever I'm done playing, it'd be nice to see them playing for 10, 12, 14 years in the NFL."

Have you enjoyed playing with Manning again?

"It doesn't get better than that. I never thought I'd have that chance again when I left Indy and came here (in 2007). To have that opportunity to play with who I think is the best quarterback to ever play in the NFL, it's special."

Do the two of you still have the connection you shared in Indianapolis?

"When you have that foundation that you spent four years building in Indy, you have that for life. When we get on the field, it's one of those things where we know what the other is thinking. So it's good to have that and I feel like we've picked up where we left off back in '06."

How does a wide receiver go about earning Manning's trust?

"You have to prove it every day in practice, that you're going to be in the right place at the right time in the right spots. When he gives you an opportunity and throws you the ball, you have to catch it and make plays. Really, the only way to earn that trust is to do it every day and be consistent. Whatever receiver it is, if you do that, you'll get a lot of balls thrown your way and you'll have a lot of opportunities to make plays."

What is your impression of Head Coach John Fox?

"He's great. He's one of those coaches that if you go out there and you work hard and do the right things, he gives you a lot of respect as a player. I think all guys love playing for somebody like that."

Is he a "player's coach?"

"I'd say absolutely. For me, it's a guy that treats his players fair. If you go out there and work hard for him, he treats you like a man. I think guys respect that. That's how Coach is."

What did you tell Manning when he visited Denver and stayed at your house?

"I told him it's a great organization with great fans. I've decided to make my home here permanently, so it's a great place to live and raise a family. There are really no negatives about coming to play for the Denver Broncos and living here, playing for this organization. All around the board, for me, it's the best in the NFL."

Do you think you had any influence on his decision?

"I can't take any credit (laughs). I don't think so. But I just tried to lay it out there and let him know that it is a good place with good people here. If that helped at all -- I don't really, probably think so. But I put my two cents in and was hoping it would help a little bit."

What are your goals for 2012?

"For me, it's just try to get better every day and try to help this football team win games. That's what I've always been about -- winning games. I don't set personal goals for stats like catches or yards for a season. Win games. Make the playoffs. Win a Super Bowl. That's the ultimate. Those are pretty much always my goals and they stay the same every year."

Tamme Continues His Work For Wounded Vets

By Mary Jo Perino

July 16, 2012

Kentucky has not found a suitable replacement for Jacob Tamme since he graduated. The last true threat at tight end was the former Boyle County star, who's played for the Indianapolis Colts since leaving UK.

This offseason, he was traded to the Denver Broncos. He rejoined former Colts teammate Peyton Manning and former UK teammate Wesley Woodyard. He should be able to make an impact this season in Denver. But there was one thing he worried about when he heard the news. How would he keep his golf tournament going from half way across the United States?

"I have no idea how it's going to go year to year. I was concerned about the move out to Denver," said Tamme.

He's talking about Swing For Soldiers, a charity golf tournament he and his wife started three years ago. It helps raise money to build accessible homes for wounded veterans. He's helped a lot of people so far and because it's Jacob Tamme, and because he's got great friends, he made it happen.

"We have a ton of support again this year, we have exactly how many teams we wanted. I can't thank the people who have joined on to the cause enough they've been really supportive over the past couple years."

Because of Tamme's efforts, a home for Kenneth Harker, who lost both of his legs, should be ready by September.

Broncos' Demaryius Thomas returns home to Georgia as emerging star WR

Mike Klis
The Denver Post
September 17, 2012

ATLANTA — Demaryius Thomas was hoping the Broncos' transportation system would arrive here in his college hometown early enough Sunday so he could order out Gladys Knight's chicken and waffles.

"They've got this smothered chicken that is banging," Thomas said. "Chicken and rice. Cornbread."

What he's not likely to order is a bushel of peas. The Broncos' most dangerous receiver grew up about a two-hour drive from here in the Georgia country town of Montrose.

"Super country," he said. "We'd stand on dirt roads. Had our own fields. We had pea fields, cornfields. Planting tomatoes, collard greens. We had cows around. We had cotton fields around."

When the Broncos play the Atlanta Falcons on Monday night at the Georgia Dome, Thomas will show the home folks — particularly his 35 to 40 relatives and friends who will attend the game — how far he has come since he was here. Starting when Thomas was a high school freshman, and on through his graduation to the Georgia Tech campus in downtown Atlanta, the aunt and uncle who raised him, Shirley and James Brown, would make their nephew get up every Saturday at 6 a.m. to pick peas or pull corn.

"We'd make a couple bucks," Thomas said. "We'd get $3.50 a bushel. A bushel is a lot of peas. You know how many peas you have to pick to fill a bushel? We would work from 6 to 2, then I'd have to go home and cut the yard."

After four years at Georgia Tech, a football program that runs the option offense yet is uncanny in its production of top-tier Sunday league receivers, Thomas became the first of the Broncos' first-round draft picks in 2010.

Vikings game serves notice

It took all of Thomas' rookie year and most of his second before he started playing to his first-round potential.

And then, starting with a Dec. 4 game at Minnesota last season, Thomas began rivaling Calvin Johnson as the league's top receiver. Thomas was the game's No. 1 star in the Broncos' 35-32 defeat of the Vikings that day as he had four catches for 144 yards and two touchdowns. That 36.0-yard average was astounding until he averaged 51.0 yards on four catches — including an 80-yard touchdown snag-and-run on the first play of overtime that will go down in the film archives of Broncos history — to beat the Pittsburgh Steelers in a first-round playoff game.

From that Vikings game in 2011 until the 2012 season opener last Sunday against the Steelers, Thomas' 855 receiving yards in eight games rank third among NFL receivers behind the New York Giants' Victor Cruz (906 in 10 games) and Detroit's Johnson, a fellow Georgia Tech product who had 980 yards in that span (in seven games).

"As a defensive coach, when he gets the ball in his hands, you've got to hold your breath because he can break tackles," said Atlanta Falcons coach Mike Smith, who often watched Thomas play in his backyard in college. "He's got a great stiff-arm and he's got outstanding long speed, as evidenced by the way he ran on the quick screen in the game Sunday night."

The 6-foot-3, 230-pound Thomas used his stiff-arm weapon to strong-arm Steelers cornerback Ike Taylor on that 80-yard game-winner in last season's playoffs, a play he topped off by outrunning the angle of safety Ryan Mundy. New season, Thomas turned a Peyton Manning screen pass into a 71-yard touchdown that keyed the Broncos' 31-19 win last week.

Thomas also had receptions of 42, 41 and 40 yards in the Vikings game. He is strong to go over the middle and catch the ball in tight coverage, and fast enough for the big play.

"His size is pretty rare for any receiver, and when you add that kind of speed to it, you saw that touchdown the other day," Manning said. "That could have been an intermediate gain for a lot of guys, but he turned on the jets and took it for 71 yards. I think the needle's pointing up."

For too long in Thomas' first two seasons with the Broncos, his needle laid inert. It wasn't so much he figured out the NFL and started to click eight games ago. The difference was as simple as playing.

"I think it was me being all the way healthy," he said. "And also once I learned the plays and was able to get outside (the training room) and get reps, I think I was able to play faster. When I'm not on the field and not in game shape and thinking about what I've got to do, I'm not as explosive as I should be. Now I'm in the right place and can get more balls."

String of injuries

Not surprisingly, good health, not stats, is Thomas' goal in 2012. Stay healthy and the stats will be there. He was hurt so many times early in his Broncos career, and he was hurt before they even drafted him. He suffered a broken fifth metatarsal in his foot while training for the NFL scouting combine in 2010, yet Broncos coach Josh McDaniels took him in the first round anyway. Thomas later missed games because of an ankle injury, a torn Achilles and a broken pinkie.

Often when athletes suffer a string of injuries, the first one leads to others.

"I think I tried to come back too fast," he said. "I had an injury, got heavy, then I tried to work out too fast and I just wasn't ready."

He's more than just ready now. Almost from the instant he got healthy, Thomas started dominating NFL games by the bushel.

Trevathan making his mark with Broncos

Frank Jolley
The Daily Commercial (Leesburg, Fla.)
July 7, 2012

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. -- Danny Trevathan is proving that he belongs in the National Football League.

The former Leesburg High School and University of Kentucky linebacker, a sixth round draft pick of the Denver Broncos, became the team's first rookie from the Class of 2012 to crack the starting lineup.

Trevathan worked with first team nickel defense during the Broncos' mandatory minicamp in June. He broke up at least one pass in coverage.

"It's a learning process, but I'm pleased with the progress I've made so far," Trevathan said. "I'm learning to react quicker, because that seems to be the biggest difference in the NFL. A lot of people talk about the speed of the game, but that hasn't been a problem for me.

"In the NFL, you have to read a play quickly and react or you'll get hung out to dry."

He also may see playing time at weakside linebacker if the six-game suspension levied against D.J. Williams for using performance-enhancing drugs is upheld.

Williams sought to have the suspension overturned in court, but a federal judge dismissed his complaint. He has since filed an appeal.

Trevathan said he will make the most of any opportunity he has to live his dream of playing professional football. To that end, he spends a great deal of time at the Broncos' training facility watching film, working out and reading his playbook.

Broncos head coach John Fox said Trevathan has made the most of his time with the team since being drafted. Fox complimented the rookie for his work ethic.

"Danny has attacked it really well as far as in the meeting rooms and in his playbook," Fox said. "This game is so mental, and for a young guy, he's caught on pretty quickly."

He also hopes that spending time around a pair of quarterbacking legends -- executive vice president of football operations John Elway, and starting quarterback Peyton Manning -- will grow his learning curve.

"Oh man, I still can't believe that I get to be around those guys," Trevathan said. "(Elway) wants to see everyone on this team succeed. He doesn't play favorites. His goal is to help us play our best and win football games. I'd be crazy not to listen to everything he has to say.

"The same goes for Peyton. He's one of the last guys to leave the building every day. I just watch what he does and pay attention to him. If I could get into his head and see the game how does, I would. The best part about Peyton Manning is that he's a great teammate.

"It doesn't matter if you're a veteran or a rookie. He'll talk to you and help you if you're struggling with a certain look. He'll pick you apart on the practice field and then help you in the film room."

Trevathan, who signed a four-year, $2.2 million contract with the Broncos shortly after the draft, said he is not motivated by proving that he should've been selected higher in the draft. Instead, he wants to prove he is worthy of the contract he signed and wants to establish himself in the league.

His goal is to build on his time with the starting unit when he reports to training camp July 22.

"I haven't accomplished anything in the NFL," Trevathan said. "We haven't even put on pads in any of our workouts. I don't want anyone to be too impressed with me at this point. Right now, I just want to play football and learn how to be a professional.

"I believe I can play with anybody and I hope to prove that when training camp begins and we put on pads."

At Kentucky, Trevathan had 143 tackles last season and was a second-team All-SEC pick. He added 11 1/2 tackles for loss and a team high four interceptions.

Trevathan has long hoped that his gridiron success inspires future Leesburg standouts.

As a freshman at Leesburg, Trevathan was in danger of falling so far into arrears academically that graduation appeared to be virtually impossible.

However, Trevathan was pressed to step up his academic efforts by then-Yellow Jackets coach Charles Nassar and managed to raise his academic standing enough to not only graduate from Leesburg, but also to accept a scholarship offer from Kentucky.

Eaton's Mitch Unrein uses strong work ethic to make a name for himself with Denver Broncos

By T.M. Fasano
Windsor Now
May 13, 2012

Mitch Unrein is making sure that being a professional athlete isn't going to his head.

The 6-foot-4, 291-pound Unrein, a 2005 Eaton High School graduate who plays defensive tackle for the Denver Broncos, returned to his roots on April 28 and volunteered his time by signing autographs and posing for photographs at the inaugural Crushin' Cancer Benefit Softball Tournament in Windsor. Unrein, 25, was joined at the tournament by teammates Cassius Vaughn, a cornerback, and safety David Bruton.

Unrein, who played his college football for the University of Wyoming where he was a three-time honorable-mention All-Mountain West Conference selection his final three years, drove up from his townhome in Parker to Windsor and didn't charge the tournament officials for appearing.

"It's always great to give back to the surrounding community for a great cause like this," Unrein said. "I can't ask for anything more but to come out and help. I lost an uncle to cancer. It means a lot to me to come out here and support everyone that has battled cancer."

Unrein, an all-state lineman at 210 pounds when he played for the Reds and a 215-pound Class 3A state champion in wrestling his senior year, said he's all about giving small-town kids encouragement to go out and play sports and possibly make it to the professional level.

Unrein's path to the NFL wasn't easy. He tore up his knee his senior year at Eaton and missed more than half the football season. He walked on at Wyoming before then-coach Joe Glenn recognized his talents and offered Unrein a full scholarship to play for the Cowboys. He wasn't drafted after his senior year and signed with the Houston Texans as a college free agent in May 2010.

Unrein eventually joined the team he grew up rooting for as a practice squad signee for the Broncos in October 2010. He made the 53-man roster in 2011 and played in 14 games and ended up with eight tackles.

"Growing up I was always a Denver Broncos fan," Unrein said. "To be able to run out of the tunnel in the blue and orange, there's no feeling like it."

Unrein said it's special to have Hall of Fame quarterback John Elway, who is the Broncos' executive vice president of football operations, as his boss.

"He was one of my favorite players growing up," Unrein said. "To see him every day at Dove Valley is pretty surreal. Just getting to know John Elway is pretty cool."

Unrein said he's had the opportunity to meet free-agent prize Peyton Manning.

"He's a really good guy. He's the hardest worker," Unrein said. "He's in the facility all day long watching film, working out, throwing to the receivers. That's just somebody you can really learn from because he's been in the league for so long, and he's had such an impact on the league. If you're a young guy like myself, you can really take and learn from guys like him. No matter what position they are, the more time you spend in there the more you get out of it on game day."

Unrein is one of three Weld County athletes — Jason Smith of the New Orleans Hornets in the NBA and Reed Doughty of the Washington Redskins in the NFL — who are currently drawing paychecks on the biggest stage. All three of them played in the smaller-schools Patriot League in high school.

"We're hard-working, small-school kids. That's what you try to hang your hat on coming from a small school," Unrein said. "A lot of these Division I colleges say you have to play in the best competition week in and week out at the high school level, but when you make it to college you really show them your work ethic is everything that you have. That's what puts you up and above everybody else."

Unrein said he didn't think he was NFL worthy until late in his career at Wyoming. "I don't think it really hit me until my senior year when I really started talking to (NFL) scouts at Wyoming," Unrein said. "I walked on, so I had no aspirations to even make it to the next level. After my first year, they gave me a scholarship. They told me after the second week of practice that they were going to put me on scholarship the next year. Just never give up. That's what I tell the young kids because there's going to be a lot of bumps in the road."

Unrein said he never took no for an answer on his to the NFL.

"You've just got to keep on grinding," Unrein said. "If they say you're not good enough, not fast enough, just keep on working. I've never been the biggest, fastest, strongest guy. My motor's got me to where I'm at. Hopefully, it will keep on working for me."

Willis Preparing for Opportunity

By Gray Caldwell
DenverBroncos.com
June 20, 2012

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. -- The 2011 season was a milestone for wide receiver Matthew Willis.

After three years on and off of practice squads and a stint on injured reserve in 2010, Willis played in all 16 games for the first time in his career.

Not to mention his team made the postseason and he played in both playoff games, hauling in an 18-yard reception against New England in the Divisional Round.

"That was big for me," Willis said. "It was huge. Finishing a season, just the knowledge you get, how you get comfortable. Last year was a whirlwind -- one of those seasons you'll never forget. It was a lot of fun. I had a good time. I'd love to follow it up again with a bigger season."

The fifth-year receiver, who was originally recruited by UCLA as a hurdler, is out to make sure that last year was not an anomaly, but rather a sign of things to come.

In 2007, Willis was signed by the Baltimore Ravens as a college free agent. Splitting time between the practice squad and the active roster, he earned playing time in five games as a rookie, hauling in an 11-yard reception and notching a special teams stop.

He spent the following season out of football before signing to the Broncos' practice squad for the final game of the year. In 2009, he made the practice squad again -- until the final game, when he cracked the starting lineup.

He followed that up with an exceptional 2010 preseason, which included a 122-yard, one-touchdown performance in the finale. But a foot injury ended his season prematurely -- he was placed on injured reserve after six games in which he caught one pass.

But it all finally came together last season. In 16 regular-season games played, he caught 18 passes for 267 yards and a touchdown.

"Matt Willis is a guy that nobody talks about a lot, but Matt is a leader in that receiver room as well," Wide Receivers Coach Tyke Tolbert said. "When he says stuff, people listen. He leads by example. He's always back there helping the young guys. He's one of the smartest guys that I've ever been around, as far as knowing all the positions. So I'm very pleased with him from a leadership standpoint."

Willis agreed that he sometimes feels like a veteran in the meeting room, but he admitted that at times he still feels like a young guy.

His place right in between the veterans and younger players suits him just fine.

"I think it's a great group," Willis said. "We've got Stoke (Brandon Stokley) as our veteran guy, we've got DT (Demaryius Thomas) and (Eric) Decker, who have made plays, Bubba (Andre Caldwell) made plays in Cincinnati, Jason (Hill) has made plays, then we've got a group of younger guys that are hungry and ready to compete. You've got a good staircase of talented players. Everyone's hungry and ready to make a play and we all work well together. So it's been a lot of fun."

A restricted free agent entering the offseason, Willis said he knew he wanted to be back in Denver, and was elated when that became a reality.

Now he's working on overcoming a "learning curve" while digesting a new offensive system, and understands that what he did last season doesn't necessarily mean much entering 2012.

"Every year you start over," he said. "You take it year-by-year. My goal is to come in again and prove myself, make plays and just build off of that."

He was happy with how OTAs and minicamp went for him, and he hopes to keep getting "bigger, faster, stronger" by the time training camp rolls around.

He understands the opportunity in front of him with a quarterback the caliber of Peyton Manning under center. He's already learned plenty from Manning, watching his work ethic and asking him questions along the way.

It's not lost on Willis that in his career, Manning has helped turn previously unknown players into household names, whether it was new Bronco Jacob Tamme, Pierre Garcon, "Austin Collie," Willis chimed in.

"Based on Peyton's history, the fact that he's going through his reads and throwing to open guys, it doesn't matter what quote-unquote 'number' receiver you are, you're going to get your touches," Tolbert said. "Peyton is just that good, to the point where he's not going to try to force-feed any particular guy. He's going to go through his reads and hit the open guy. That's what he's been able to do and that's why he's been so successful."

Willis said he's putting in the work now to make sure he'll be in position to benefit.

"It's definitely a good situation to be in," he said. "We're going to pass. With a guy like that who can put a ball anywhere, it's up to us to make the plays. I just hope to earn a spot and be out there to make those plays."

Denver Broncos rookie defensive lineman Derek Wolfe a big hit so far

Lindsay H. Jones
The Denver Post
August 11, 2012

Finally, as Derek Wolfe planted his hand in the Soldier Field dirt Thursday night, he was staring down a live target. After weeks of being told "Don't touch the quarterback," Wolfe couldn't wait to start a pass rush and finish it. Sure, Thursday was just a preseason game, and nothing that happened in Chicago will stick on Wolfe's NFL record. But with two sacks and another tackle for a loss, Wolfe made a good first impression.

"Obviously I want to be starting, so I'm going to do what I have to do to start. I'll keep my head down, keep grinding, keep pushing," Wolfe said. "You get what you deserve in this league. And if you deserve to start, they'll put you in there."

It's exactly the type of statement the Broncos expect to hear from their top pick. Still, he was largely an unknown prospect when the Broncos drafted him at No. 36 in April.

As the Broncos settle into the middle of the preseason and three more meaningless games, maybe it's time to fire up Google and track down some University of Cincinnati defensive highlights. What those Wolfe highlights reveal is a defensive lineman who routinely overpowered his opponent, and ran over and around offensive linemen en route to sacking the quarterback.

In four seasons with the Bearcats, Wolfe had 19½ sacks, including 9½ sacks last season. He also had 21½ tackles for a loss in 2011, stats usually associated with a defensive end, not an interior lineman.

"That's why they liked me — because of what I did in college," Wolfe said.

One of Jay Rodgers' first tasks in his new job as Broncos' defensive line coach was to find a role for Wolfe in the rotation of tackles and ends. Rodgers took over the job in mid-May when Wayne Nunnely retired. The only problem was, Wolfe wasn't allowed to be at Dove Valley because of an NCAA rule that prevents newly drafted players from joining their NFL teams until their college class graduates. At the University of Cincinnati, the graduation ceremony was June 9, meaning Wolfe was forced to work out on his own in Ohio while the rest of his teammates and coaches were going through organized team activities in Denver.

"There was no staying up to speed, because I wasn't allowed to really have contact with the coaches at all," Wolfe said. "I just tried to stay in shape. You can always control what type of shape you're in, so that's what I worried about."

Wolfe spent much of that month doing CrossFit, mixed martial arts and boxing training, all designed to maintain strength while improving his cardiovascular endurance.

"In football, you do something quick, then stop and do something else. It's a lot of stop, go, stop, go. Not a lot of rest," Wolfe said. "(CrossFit and MMA) is about getting your lungs in condition. Anyone can grab a weight and lift it once. It's about how many times can you lift it and do it right."

There was no question about Wolfe's fitness when he was allowed to join his teammates. And once training camp began, Wolfe has thrived in the practice setting. The biggest challenge, he said, has been adapting to the mental rigor of camp, with hours of meetings and film session as he learns an NFL defense in a room full of veterans.

"We've kept him at one position, for the most part, which has simplified things," Rodgers said.

That position is strongside defensive end, where he occupies the second slot on the depth chart behind Jason Hunter. The defensive ends on the other side of the chart are Elvis Dumervil and Robert Ayers.

As the preseason has progressed, the 6-foot-5, 300-pound Wolfe also has seen increased work in the "sub" packages, sliding inside to tackle when the Broncos move into their nickel defense for passing situations. With veteran defensive tackle Justin Bannan sidelined by a strained calf, Wolfe has taken plenty of snaps with the first-team defense.

"He's got a bigger body than most ends do and he's got a chance to play a little more inside," Rodgers said. "Now, as time goes on and he learns the defense, he'll have the ability to play any place he wants to play."

And that's what Wolfe showed Thursday against the Bears. His first sack, in the first quarter, was considered a "coverage" sack; Bears quarterback Jason Campbell had nowhere to go and no one to throw to. For Wolfe's second sack, he bull rushed his way to take down Josh McCown for an 8-yard loss.

"Derek's a monster. He's really making our offensive line work hard. He's coming off the edge strong. When he's lined up inside, he's blowing up the middle. He's putting pressure on the quarterback. From what I've felt in the pocket and seen on film, I think Derek's having a great camp," said quarterback Brock Osweiler, a fellow second-round pick and frequent training camp opponent.

About Wolfe

Position: Defensive lineman

Height: 6-foot-5

Weight: 300 pounds

Age: 22

Big East co-defensive player of the year and second-team All- America honors as a senior

Rookie report

Derek Wolfe was the first of the Broncos' draft picks on the field in Thursday's preseason opener at Chicago. NFL reporter Lindsay H. Jones analyzes how those players performed in their Denver debuts:

Derek Wolfe, defensive lineman: With two sacks, and a tackle for a loss, already making the Broncos look smart for passing up higher profile tackles to wait to draft him at No. 36.

Brock Osweiler, quarterback: He'd like to forget his first pass, which skipped short of its intended receiver. But Osweiler, playing the third quarter, went on two complete four of his next six passes, including a touchdown to Jason Hill.

Ronnie Hillman, running back: Traveled to Chicago, but did not play as he continues to recover from a minor hamstring injury.

Omar Bolden, cornerback: Played most of the second half at the inside and outside cornerback positions. Credited with making one tackle.

Philip Blake, offensive lineman: Still playing with the third-string offensive line, though his versatility as a guard and center will help his case to make the 53-man roster.

Malik Jackson, defensive lineman: Playing with the third-string defense in the second half, Jackson recovered a fumble.

Danny Trevathan, linebacker: The sixth-round pick got plenty of work as a weakside linebacker in the second-string base defense and nickel packages. He suffered an ankle injury late in the game, but the injury isn't considered to be serious.

On or off the NFL field, Woodyard says Mom knows best

By Dick Gabriel
Big Blue Insider
July 16, 2012

He was an all-stater in high school in Lagrange, Georgia, an All-Southeastern Conference performer at Kentucky and now, Wesley Woodyard is one of the top special teams linebackers in the National Football League.

And for that, we have Edna Sutton to thank.

She is the mother of Woodyard, who returned to his old Kentucky home over the weekend to hold a free camp for youngsters, looking to learn the game that has carried Woodyard to the top of his profession.

He could be spending his down time on a beach somewhere, sipping something with an umbrella floating in it, but instead, Woodyard is giving back. It's a lesson he got from his mom.

"That's something my mom always taught me," he said. "Give back to people who need help and are willing to be helped."

As soon as he made the Broncos, as an undrafted free agent, Woodyard set about making a difference in the Denver community. Because of his charity work, he was the Broncos' nominee for the Walter Payton NFL Man of the year each of the last two seasons. But actually becoming an NFL player was surprisingly difficult for a man who twice led the SEC in tackles.

On draft day, every team in the league passed on Woodyard, who signed with the Broncos in part because of encouragement from Denver's assistant pro personnel director, Champ Kelly, a former Wildcat himself. He called it a gloomy time in his life, but his mother urged him never to give up.

Woodyard quickly established himself as a playmaker, and for three of the past four seasons he has been the Broncos special teams captain.

"I started my career (at UK) on special teams," he said, "the first Louisville game. Coach Ort (then special teams coach Steve Ortmyer) loved me to death. I'd go down the field and sacrifice my body."

For so many players hoping to catch on in the NFL, special teams can be their ticket to the big league. Ex-UK tailback Alfonso Smith hooked on with the Arizona

Cardinals via special teams, and former Wildcat linebacker Danny Travathan is hoping follow Woodyard's path with the Broncos. "If you can't play special teams, you can't really do much," Woodyard said. "It can increase your chances of playing 10-13 years. "

Woodyard is looking to serve as a mentor for Travathan, who will be competing with him for playing time, as well as a slot on the roster.

"You fight for your job every year," Woodyard said. "It's something I appreciate. I see new guys get drafted and come in every year. I thrive on competition. I love being a competitive guy. I love the game of football and make sure I put my all in it."

Woodyard is confident Travathan will stick.

"Danny is a great athlete," he said. "I respect him. I picked him up and took him out to eat. The first thing he said was, 'I want to contribute to the team, no matter what it is. I want to help you guys win.' A young guy who says that, the future is bright. That's the attitude you want to have.

"He's one of the best guys I've seen come in as a rookie."

Travathan no doubt would remind Denver fans of the kid out of Kentucky who made the squad in 2008. Woodyard has led the team in special teams tackles in three of his four NFL seasons. Last year he started a career-high seven games, finishing second on the club with a personal-best 87 tackles (60 solo). And he did it using the skills that made him a fan-favorite in Lexington.

"The biggest thing, is whatever got you to the NFL as a linebacker, you never want to lose those instincts, the way you play the game," he said. "You want to get better, year in and year out."

And, he says, be coachable.

"A lot of guys get to the league and think, Well, I'm a professional, I don't have to listen. But you learn something new every day in the NFL. Your learning curve has to increase."

Woodyard was part of a defensive unit that found itself in the middle of a debate last season, once the Broncos began winning with Tim Tebow at quarterback. Tebow-backers pointed to the almost other-worldly type comebacks Denver put up; Tebow-bashers insisted it was the defense that was putting the team in a position to win that any NFL quarterback could exploit.

Woodyard said the Bronco defenders were fine with Tebow getting the credit. They appreciated the work ethic they saw in the former Florida Gator. "We're like offensive linemen," he said. "We don't get much praise.

"Nobody in the locker room wanted any attention," he said. "When they named him the starter, he took that team over. He was there, day in and day out, from six to six at night, sometimes 10 o'clock at night. Sometimes, he'd sleep there. He was just a guy who worked hard. He never wanted anybody to be let down. When it came fourth quarter time, it was 'Tebow time.' "

Woodyard played on one of the best UK team in years, the 2007 squad that won eight games – but still couldn't find a way to beat the Gators. "He rubbed his glory days in my face from time to time," Woodyard said with a laugh, "but getting a chance to compete against him, I respect everything he did. And getting a chance to see finally why Florida was so successful, it was because of him. He never let anybody down. He found a way to push guys better than anybody I've seen."

Woodyard says he wishes Tebow the best with the New York Jets, but he's excited to have Peyton Manning at quarterback now. "He's one of the best to play the game. He's on point out there. He has the keys to the facility," he said. "He's one of the guys who sleeps over there some nights."

And one of Manning's favorite targets is another ex-Wildcat and former Woodyard teammate, tight end Jacob Tamme, a free agent Manning suggested to the Bronco brass.

"That says a lot about Tamme – one of the best quarterbacks who ever played the game recommends you," Woodyard said. "It means a lot, and Tamme is out there. He's been working his butt off. One thing about Tamme is, he comes to work every day and competes. You're going to be better going up against those guys."

Tamme and Woodyard helped lead the Wildcats to a pair of victories in the Music City Bowl. Now, Woodyard is dreaming of something bigger.

"It would be great to win one of those Super Bowl trophies," he said, "and get the chance to get back in the locker room with Tamme and hold that trophy. It would be special."

It would be that – and one more way to make his mother proud.
