CHIEFS HOST PATRIOTS IN AFC CHAMPIONSHIP GAME

For the first time in franchise history the Chiefs will host the AFC title game at Arrowhead Stadium. The Chiefs and Patriots will meet on Sunday, Jan. 20, with kickoff slated for 5:40 p.m. CT. KC advanced to the title game after defeating the Indianapolis Colts 31-13 in the divisional round. The win marked Kansas City's first home playoff win since Jan. 8, 1994. Sunday's game marks Head Coach Andy Reid's sixth conference title appearance as a head coach. The Chiefs finished the 2018 regular season with a 12-4 record and the number one seed in the AFC. It was the first time under the current playoff format that the Chiefs have locked in the one seed and home-field throughout. Kansas City has now earned three straight AFC West titles. Under Head Coach Andy Reid, the Chiefs have registered five 10-plus win seasons in six years and qualified for the postseason five times (including four straight seasons). The Chiefs are 8-1 at home this season. KC is 21-2 (.913) against AFC West opponents in the last 23 games and 26-10 (.722) in AFC West play since 2013. Reid earned his 207th career victory (regular and postseason combined) last week. He ranks seventh on the NFL's all-time wins list. Reid is in his sixth season with the club, recording 65 regular season wins with the Chiefs, marking the highest combined win total of any head coach in franchise history in that time frame.

KC ranked first in the NFL in scoring this season (third in NFL history) with a franchise-record 565 points (35.3 ppg). The club led the league in yards per play (6.84) and ranked first in the NFL in yards per game (425.6). Chiefs QB Patrick Mahomes' 50 touchdown passes and 52 throws of 25-plus yards led the league this season. Mahomes now owns the franchise record for TD passes in a single season, previously held by Hall of Fame QB Len Dawson (30 in 1964). He had a league-best TD/INT differential (+38) and tallied 10 300-plus yard passing games in 2018. TE Travis Kelce ranked second in the NFL in receiving yards for tight ends with 1,336 yards (second most single-season receiving yards all-time by a tight end). He has caught a pass in 79 consecutive regular season games and had five 100-yard receiving games in 2018 (17 career). WR Tyreek Hill ranked first in the NFL with 22 catches of 25+ yards and was fourth in the NFL with 12 touchdown receptions. WR Sammy Watkins had 519 yards on 40 catches and three TDs.

KC's defense ranked tied for first in the NFL with 52.0 team sacks. The club forced 27 turnovers this season (15 INTs, 12 fumbles) and allowed only 18 takeaways (12 INTs, six fumbles). The Chiefs had a +9 turnover differential. DE Chris Jones recorded 15.5 sacks this season including at least 1.0 in 11 straight games (Oct. 7-Dec. 23, NFL record for most consecutive games). LB Dee Ford notched 13.0 sacks this season and seven forced fumbles. LB Justin Houston had 9.0 sacks and five forced fumbles. On special teams, P Dustin Colquitt punted only 45 times this season and held a net average of 40.5. K Harrison Butker made 24 of 27 field goal attempts and 65 of 69 extra points this season. Chiefs opponents had an average drive start of the 25.7 yard line, ranking second in the NFL.

CHIEFS MEDIA WEBSITE INFORMATION

The Kansas City Chiefs 2018 Media Guide is available on the Chiefs media information website, NFLOMG.com. In 2015, the club introduced an improved interactive online media guide that features an in-game statistics monitoring platform, in addition to the weekly press materials such as transcripts, weekly releases, bios, additional stats and more. The club's guide is updated weekly throughout the season to reflect the most up-to-date information. Media members can also access the Chiefs credential application through the site. To login, the username is chiefsmedia and the password is chiefs.

DID YOU KNOW?

In 1984 and on the 25th anniversary of the AFL, the NFL announced that the winner of the AFC Championship would receive the Lamar Hunt Trophy. Named for Chiefs and AFL founder Lamar Hunt, the trophy is a tribute to his persistence and dedication in carrying out his dream of creating a professional football league. The Lamar Hunt Trophy and the George Halas Trophy (NFC) were redesigned in 2010 to resemble the Lombardi Trophy.

CHIEFS ROSTER BY PLAYOFF EXPERIENCE

Prior to the Divisional Round game against the Colts, out of the 53 players on Kansas City's active roster, 39 (73.6%) had either appeared in postseason action or were on a postseason roster but did not appear in a game. Those 39 players had accounted for 110 total postseason games played and 60 total starts.

One player on the Chiefs active roster, Frank Zombo, has a Super Bowl title (Super Bowl XLV with Green Bay).

RB Spencer Ware was on Injured Reserve for the 2013 Super Bowl Champion Seattle Seahawks.

Dustin Colquitt and Frank Zombo have the most postseason games played of any players on the Chiefs roster with eight total postseason appearances.

Eric Berry, Jeff Allen, Justin Houston, Eric Fisher and Travis Kelce are tied with the most postseason starts on the current Kansas City roster with five starts each.

Eleven players on the Chiefs have started every postseason game they have played in (Eric Berry, Jeff Allen, Eric Fisher, Travis Kelce, Mitchell Schwartz, Chris Jones, Sammy Watkins, Reggie Ragland, Mitch Morse, Cam Erving, Patrick Mahomes).

CHIEFS HEAD COACH ANDY REID

Reid is in his 27th NFL season, 20th as a head coach and sixth with the Chiefs. In six seasons with the club he's tallied 65 wins, more victories than any other head coach in franchise history in that timeframe.

Under Reid, the Chiefs have made the playoffs five of his first six seasons. The club earned three straight AFC West Titles (2016-18) for the first time in franchise history. In 2018 the Chiefs earned the number one seed in the AFC playoffs with a 12-4 record. The Chiefs defeated the Colts 31-13 in the divisional round to advance to the AFC Championship Game. KC finished 10-6 in 2017. In 2016, Kansas City went 12-4 and won the AFC West, earning a first-round bye in the playoffs. In 2015, the Chiefs won their first playoff game since 1994, defeating the Texans 30-0. The team finished 11-5 after a 1-5 start in 2015. It was the greatest turnaround in a single-season in NFL history. In 2013, Reid led the Chiefs to an 11-5 record marking the greatest singleseason turnaround in franchise history after the team finished 2-14 in 2012. Reid boasts a career record of 195-124-1 (.611) in the regular season. He also owns an 12-13 postseason record. Prior to joining the Chiefs, Reid led the Eagles to a 130-93-1 (.583) regular season record during his 14 seasons as head coach. He led the Eagles franchise to one Super Bowl appearance. When you include his time as an NFL assistant coach, his teams have made the playoffs 20 times including 2018 (20-17 record), and he has coached in three Super Bowls, eight NFC Championships and one AFC Championship (2018). Reid spent seven seasons as an assistant coach with the Green Bay Packers under Head Coach Mike Holmgren. Prior to joining the NFL ranks, Reid's final collegiate stop was the University of Missouri (1989-91). Prior to his stint with the Tigers, Reid spent two years working with the offensive line at the University of Texas - El Paso, and before that, he held the same position with Northern Arizona. In 1983, Reid took the position of offensive coordinator and offensive line coach at San Francisco State (1983-85). A tackle/guard at Brigham Young University from 1979-81, Reid entered the coaching ranks as a graduate assistant at BYU in 1982.

PATRIOTS HEAD COACH BILL BELICHICK

Bill Belichick enters his 44th season as an NFL coach and his 19th season as head coach of the New England Patriots in 2018. Belichick became the Patriots 14th head coach in franchise history on Jan. 7, 2000. In 2017, Belichick led New England to a 15-4 record and eighth Super Bowl appearance since becoming head coach in New England.

In 19 seasons with the Patriots, he has delivered five Super Bowl championships, eight conference titles, 16 division crowns and 28 playoff victories. In 2016, Belichick won his fifth Super Bowl as head coach of the Patriots, surpassing Pittsburgh's Chuck Noll for most Super Bowl wins by a head coach. He enters 2018 with the most wins among all active coaches and is currently fourth all-time with 290 victories as a head coach. Belichick's recent accomplishments are the latest triumphs in an NFL coaching career that began in 1975, during which he has helped produce seven Super Bowl titles, 11 conference championships and 23 division titles. Belichick's coaching journey includes one other stint as a head coach with the Cleveland Browns, where at 38 he became the NFL's youngest head coach at the time.

Prior to joining the Patriots in 2000, Belichick spent 12 seasons with the New York Giants (1979-90) in multiple roles before becoming the head coach of the Browns. He later joined Bill Parcells for several seasons as the assistant head coach/secondary with New England (1996) and held the same role with the New York Jets (1997-99).

Belichick lettered in football, lacrosse and squash while attending college at Wesleyan University. He was inducted into the Wesleyan University Athletics Hall of Fame as part of its inaugural class in 2008. Belichick was raised in Annapolis, Md., where his father, Steve Belichick, a former fullback for the Detroit Lions, coached for 33 years at the Naval Academy.

MCCULLOUGH'S AMAZING STORY

Kansas City Chiefs Running Backs Coach Deland McCullough was featured on ESPN's E:60, highlighting his inspirational journey to discovering his birth parents.

The feature, which aired on Sunday, Sept. 2, documents the life of Mc-Cullough, who was adopted at birth, and his search for his biological parents that spanned more than 40 years. That alone makes for a powerful story, but as it turns out, McCullough was already plenty familiar with his biological father – a man he had known since he was a kid, a man that was a mentor and father-figure who goes by the name of Sherman Smith. It's a story that defies the odds as his father was unaware that he had a son, but still served as an instrumental figure throughout McCullough's life.

"If you would have told me to pick who my father was, there's no way I would have picked him because I might have thought I wasn't worthy for him to be my father," McCullough said. "I felt like my blessings came full circle because I'd always wanted to be somebody like him."

THE BEST IN CHIEFS HISTORY

In his first six seasons as head coach of the Chiefs, Andy Reid coached his team to a 65-31 record in the first 96 games. His 67.7 winning percentage is the top mark in franchise history for any coach in his first six seasons leading the club. Marty Schottenheimer is second on that list, leading his Chiefs teams to a 60-35-1 (63.0%) record.

HEAD COACH ANDY REID NOTES

REID CAREER HIGHLIGHTS

- Career record of 195-124-1 in the regular season, as well as a 12-13 postseason record. Reid's 207 combined wins rank seventh in NFL history.
 Reid ranks second among active coaches in regular season and postseason wins. He has defeated all 32 NFL teams as a head coach. Reid owns a .611 regular season winning percentage.
- His 65 regular season wins in his first six seasons with Kansas City are more than any other head coach in franchise history in their initial six seasons. The Chiefs won three-straight AFC West titles in 2016, 2017 and 2018 for the first time in franchise history. KC finished 12-4 and earned the number one seed in the AFC Playoffs in 2018. The Chiefs defeated the Colts 31-13 on Jan. 12, 2019 to advance to the AFC title game.
- The Chiefs finished 12-4 in 2016, earning the number two seed and a first-round bye in the playoffs. Reid guided Kansas City to it's first playoff win in 22 years in 2015. The club finished 11-5 after a 1-5 start, the greatest turnaround in a single season in NFL history.
- The 2013 Chiefs, led by Head Coach Andy Reid, orchestrated the greatest single-season turnaround in franchise history after an 11-5 finish. In 2012, the team finished 2-14, a +9 turnaround in his first season with the club.
- During Reid's 14 seasons in Philadelphia, his teams made the postseason nine times, which ranked third in the NFL behind Indianapolis' 12 and New England's 10.
- Including his time as an assistant coach, Reid's teams have now made 20 playoff appearances (including 2018), as well as three Super Bowl appearances after playing in a combined eight NFC Championships and one AFC Championship (2018). He has three career Super Bowl appearances and won Super Bowl XXXI as an assistant in Green Bay. Reid owns three NFC titles and 12 division titles in his career dating back to his days as an assistant. He mentored Hall of Fame quarterback Brett Favre while with the Packers along with QB Donovan McNabb with the Eagles.

CHIEFS GENERAL MANAGER BRETT VEACH

QUICK FACTS ON CHIEFS GM BRETT VEACH

- Brett Veach was named the seventh general manager in Kansas City Chiefs history on July 10, 2017. Veach is in his second season as an NFL general manager and his 12th year in the National Football League. Prior to being elevated, he previously served as the Chiefs Co-Director of Player Personnel.
- In two seasons as the GM, Veach has helped the team earn AFC West titles in 2017 and 2018 as well as the number one seed in the AFC in 2018. The Chiefs defeated the Colts 31-13 to advance to the AFC title game.
- Veach reports directly to Chiefs Chairman & CEO Clark Hunt, who had this to say upon hiring him; "Brett has a sharp football mind, a tremendous work ethic and a keen eye for finding talent. Over the last four seasons he's played a critical role in building our football team."
- He is in his sixth season with the Chiefs after originally joining the club in 2013. He was promoted to Co-Director of Player Personnel prior to the 2015 season after serving two seasons as the club's Pro and College Personnel Analyst (2013-14).
- The Mount Carmel, Pennsylvania, native, served as a Southeast Regional Scout for the Philadelphia Eagles (2011-12) after originally joining Philadelphia's Player Personnel Department as a Pro and College Scout in 2010.
- Prior to entering the scouting department, Veach was the Assistant to Head Coach Andy Reid for three seasons in Philadelphia (2007-09).
- Before joining the Eagles, Veach was the Supervisor of Intercollegiate Athletic Events at his alma mater, the University of Delaware (2005-06). He was a four-year letterman as a wide receiver for the Blue Hens, catching 99 passes for 1,470 yards (14.8 avg.). He left Delaware as the school's all-time leader in kickoff return yards with 1,558 yards.He was a standout running back for Mount Carmel High School. Wife Alison; Children twin sons, Elijah and Wylan, and a daughter, Ella.

2018 CHIEFS PRO BOWL PLAYERS

The National Football League announced on Dec. 18 that six members of the Kansas City Chiefs have been selected to participate in the 2019 NFL Pro Bowl. The below players have earned a spot on the AFC's Pro Bowl roster:

Eric Fisher (Tackle) – 1st Nomination
Dee Ford (Linebacker) – 1st Nomination
Tyreek Hill (Wide Receiver) – 3rd Nomination
Travis Kelce (Tight End) – 4th Nomination
Patrick Mahomes (Quarterback) – 1st Nomination
Anthony Sherman (Fullback) – 1st Nomination

The 2019 Pro Bowl will return to Camping World Stadium in Orlando, Florida, and will be televised on ESPN and ESPN Deportes and simulcast on ABC. The NFL is the only sports league that combines voting by fans, coaches and players to determine its all-star teams.

Chiefs DE Chris Jones, P Dustin Colquitt, K Harrison Butker, LB Anthony Hitchens and T Mitchell Schwartz were named alternates.

ROLLING IN THE REDZONE

Through the 2018 season, the Chiefs scored touchdowns on 71.8 percent of their red zone possessions, which ranked second in the NFL. The club scored 51 touchdowns and 17 field goals on 71 drives within the opponent's 20 yard line.

CHIEFS EMBRACING NEW HELMET TECHNOLOGY

The Kansas City Chiefs were among the league-leaders when it came to the number of orders placed for the new Vicis ZERO1 helmet, according to Chiefs Director of Equipment Allen Wright.

The helmet consists of technology that's new to the industry.

The "ZERO1" features a soft outer shell and an underlying layer of columns designed to mitigate collisions from multiple directions.

It's the first helmet that's made of a flexible polymer on the outside that deforms upon impact, much like that of a bumper on a car. It reduces the overall impact to the head, and it's being used by many players around the league and the Chiefs. Kansas City currently has 40 players in Vicis helmets including: QB Patrick Mahomes, WR Sammy Watkins, S Eric Berry, and C Mitch Morse, among others.

In collaboration with the NFL and the NFLPA, the 2017 helmet laboratory testing performance results chart, which is posted in locker rooms across the NFL, has the ZERO1 ranked as the best helmet on the market to reduce head impact severity.

GLOBAL TIES

The 2018 Chiefs roster has several global ties, including two internationally born players.

• G Laurent Duvernay-Tardif is from Quebec, where he attended McGill University and became just the second player out of McGill to be drafted into the NFL. Sticking to his Canadian roots during the 2018 PyeongChang Winter Olympics, Duvernay-Tardif served as a reporter for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

- WR Chris Conley, was born in Adana, Turkey, while his father was stationed there with the Air Force.
- Despite not being born internationally, LB Tanoh Kpassagnon spent his summers visiting his father, an economist in Ivory Coast.
- After S Daniel Sorensen's freshman season at BYU in 2008, he missed the next two football seasons while he was serving in the Costa Rica San Jose Mission in 2010-11.
- Born in Virginia Beach, Va., DT Derrick Nnadi is a first generation American. His father came to the United States in 1978 from Nigeria in search of a better life for himself and his family.

2017 ROAD WIN STREAK

The Chiefs won their ninth-consecutive road victory in Houston in 2017, a streak that dated back to Week 6 of the 2016 season (at Oakland, Oct. 16, 2016). The club's nine-game road winning streak tied for the longest such streak in franchise history, matching a nine-game streak that was set in the 1966-67 seasons.

2018 DRAFT CLASS ON ROSTER

LB Breeland Speaks was selected 46th overall out of Mississippi after Kansas City traded up eight spots with Cincinnati. Speaks was the first pick of the 2018 Draft for the Chiefs. At Mississippi, Speaks amassed 127 tackles, 15 TFLs and nine sacks. He was the only player from Mississippi taken in the first three rounds of the 2018 NFL Draft.

DT Derrick Nnadi was selected in the 3rd round, 75th overall from Florida State. In 44 career games, Nnadi recorded 165 tackles, 24.5 TFLs and 12.0 sacks. Nnadi is the first Seminole drafted by the Chiefs since C Rodney Hudson was drafted 55th overall in 2011.

LB Dorian O'Daniel was drafted with the final pick of the 3rd round (100th overall) from Clemson. O'Daniel was the Chiefs second selection in the 3rd round, joining DT Derrick Nnadi. At Clemson, he played in three College Football Playoffs and won the 2016 National Championship. O'Daniel had 116 tackles, 15.5 TFLs and 3.5 sacks in 40 career games.

S Armani Watts was taken 124th overall in the 4th round out of Texas A&M. A four-year starter, Watts led the team in interceptions his freshman year (3). He would finish his career with 328 tackles and 10 interceptions. Watts is the first defensive back from Texas A&M drafted by the Chiefs in team history.

CB Tremon Smith was drafted in the 6th round, 196th overall, from Central Arkansas. He is the first player from Central Arkansas drafted by Kansas City in team history. Smith was a four-year starter at cornerback and had 15 interceptions. He finished his career with 146 tackles and 9.0 TFLs.

G Kahlil McKenzie was selected 198th overall out of Tennessee, the Chiefs second 6th round pick of the 2018 Draft. McKenzie played defensive tackle in college, registering 72 tackles and 3.0 sacks. After being drafted, the Chiefs converted him to an offensive guard. Kahlil is the son of the divison rival Oakland Raiders' General Manager Reggie McKenzie.

2018 OFFSEASON NOTES

CHIEFS SIGN THREE KEY FREE AGENTS

The Kansas City Chiefs signed three key free agents during the 2018 offseason: Wide receiver Sammy Watkins, linebacker Anthony Hitchens and defensive tackle Xavier Williams.

Watkins (6-1, 211) has played in 52 games (51 starts) in four NFL seasons with the Los Angeles Rams (2017) and Buffalo Bills (2014-16). His career numbers include 192 receptions for 3,052 yards (15.9 avg.) with 25 touchdowns. In 2015, Watkins eclipsed 1,000 receiving yards, tallying 1,047 yards on 60 catches. He has 11 career games with 100-plus receiving yards, including four games over 150 yards. The Fort Myers, Florida, native originally entered the NFL as a first-round selection (fourth overall) of the Bills in the 2014 NFL Draft.

Hitchens (6-0, 235) has played in 60 games (48 starts) in four NFL seasons with the Dallas Cowboys (2014-17). His career numbers include 301 tackles (190 solo), 21 tackles for loss, 3.5 sacks and 14 pressures. He owns two forced fumbles, eight passes defensed and one interception. The Lorain, Ohio, native, originally entered the NFL as a fourth-round selection (119th overall) of the Cowboys in the 2014 NFL Draft.

Williams (6-2, 309) has played in 23 games (two starts) in three NFL seasons with the Arizona Cardinals (2015-17). His career numbers include 28 tackles (22 solo), 0.5 sacks (-5.0 yards), two tackles for loss and one forced fumble. He originally entered the NFL as an undrafted free agent with the Cardinals on May 5, 2015. The Kansas City, Missouri, native, played collegiately at Northern Iowa and prepped at Grandview High School in Grandview, Missouri.

CHIEFS P DUSTIN COLQUITT SIGNS EXTENSION

The Kansas City Chiefs announced on March 15 that punter Dustin Colquitt signed an extension with the club.

"Dustin has played an important role in our team's success the last five seasons, and has consistently performed at a high level his entire career here," General Manager Brett Veach said. "He wanted to be in Kansas City, and we are happy to keep him here for the foreseeable future."

"Dustin is without a doubt one of the best punters in the National Football League," Head Coach Andy Reid said. "He's been critical for us in flipping field position and pinning opponents deep. Off the field he's been a staple in the community, and we are glad he's staying with us."

Colquitt (6-3, 210) has played in 206 games in 13 seasons with the Chiefs (2005-17). His career numbers include 1,031 punts for 46,246 yards (44.9 avg.) with 90 touchbacks and 420 inside the 20. He holds a career net average of 39.7 yards and a long of 81 yards. Colquitt holds many Chiefs records for punting, including highest career average (44.9), highest net average (39.7) and most career punts inside the 20 (420). Colquitt has earned Pro Bowl honors twice, his first following the 2012 season and his most recent following the 2016 season. He has the third-most games played in franchise history (206).

The Knoxville, Tennessee, native, originally entered the NFL as Kansas City's third-round draft pick (99th overall) in the 2005 NFL Draft.

CHIEFS TRADE FOR CB KENDALL FULLER

The Kansas City Chiefs announced on March 14 that the club had acquired CB Kendall Fuller in a trade with the Washington Redskins.

The trade between the Chiefs and the Redskins sent QB Alex Smith to Washington in exchange for a 2018 third-round draft pick and Fuller.

"We're excited to have Kendall join our secondary," Chiefs General Manager Brett Veach said. "He's an ascending player with strong cover skills and a phenomenal work ethic. He'll add value and versatility to our defense."

Fuller (5-11, 198) played in 29 games (12 starts) in two seasons with the Washington Redskins, logging 94 tackles (74 solo), including two for a loss, four interceptions, 12 passes defensed and a forced fumble. The Baltimore, Maryland, native entered the league as a third-round pick (84th overall) by Washington in the 2016 NFL Draft.

CHIEFS NAME BIENIEMY OC

Head Coach Andy Reid and the Kansas City Chiefs announced on Jan. 9 that the club had named Eric Bieniemy the team's offensive coordinator.

"I've known Eric a long time, both as a player and a coach," Reid said. "He's done a phenomenal job with our running backs and has been involved in every aspect of our offense over the last five years. He's a great teacher and has earned this opportunity. I know he will do a good job."

Bieniemy will enter his 11th season as a coach in the National Football League in 2018 and his sixth season with the Chiefs, after serving as the club's running backs coach for five seasons (2013-17).

Under Bieniemy's tutelage in 2017, Kansas City's offense rushed for 1,903 yards, 118.9 yards per game. In 2016, RB Spencer Ware and Charcandrick West appeared as a double threat. Ware had 921 rushing yards and three rushing TDs and West rushed for 293 yards with a touchdown. Bieniemy also mentored RB Jamaal Charles, the franchise's all-time leading rusher, for four seasons (2013-16).

He spent nine seasons as an NFL running back with the Chargers (1991-94) and Bengals (1995-98) and spent the 1999 season with the Eagles under Head Coach Andy Reid.

CHIEFS NAME TOUB ASSISTANT HEAD COACH

The Kansas City Chiefs announced on April 6 that Head Coach Andy Reid named Dave Toub the team's assistant head coach.

"Dave has had the opportunity to work with our team on both sides of the football, on the field and in the classroom," Reid said. "His leadership qualities have entrusted me to promote him to Assistant Head Coach."

Toub enters his sixth season with the Chiefs in 2018. Since Toub's arrival in 2013, the Chiefs have 10 special teams touchdowns (six punt, four kickoff), which is the most in the NFL over that span. The Chiefs took over the top mark for kick return average in NFL history in 2013 averaging 29.9 yards per return.

DUVERNAY-TARDIF GETS HIS M.D.

To some, playing in the National Football League is the second-most impressive accomplishment on Laurent Duvernay-Tardif's resume.

On May 29, Duvernay-Tardif became the first practicing medical doctor on an NFL roster, graduating from McGill University in Montreal with his M.D.

Duvernay-Tardif was finishing his third year of med school at McGill at the time of the 2014 NFL Draft. With hopes of being selected on the second night, Duvernay-Tardif was unable to follow along live. Not that he didn't want to, he was just preoccupied in the ER assisting an emergency C-section for a premature newborn.

Though he wasn't selected on that second night, the Chiefs eventually used the 200th overall pick to acquire Duvernay-Tardif in the sixth round.

While spending much of his rookie season learning from the sidelines, Duvernay-Tardif appeared in 16 games while starting 13 in 2015 and 14 in 2016 and became the starting right guard during the 2017 season. His offseasons are spent back in Montreal at various hospitals on rotations, where patients have begun to recognize the Canadian standout.

"It's been a great journey for the last four years," Duvernay-Tardif said. "I don't think it would have been possible if it was not for Coach Reid."

While football remains his number one priority right now, Duvernay-Tardif plans to someday pursue his medical goals of specializing as an Emergency Room doctor.

AN ALL DEFENSIVE 2018 DRAFT CLASS

The 2018 NFL Draft marked the first time in the modern era that the Kansas City Chiefs have taken a college defensive player with every selection in the draft.

With no first-round draft selection the Chiefs traded up from the 54th overall pick in the second round to the 46th overall pick in the second round to select LB Breeland Speaks. In the third round the Chiefs traded up from the 86th overall pick to the 75th overall pick in the third round to select DT Derrick Nnadi and selected LB Dorian O'Daniel with the 100th overall pick. This sparked a trend of selecting defensive players that lasted throughout the 2018 Draft leading to an all defensive draft class.

With the loss of several key defensive players during the offseason the Chiefs had a need to select young defensive talent to complement the club's stacked offensive roster.

The Chiefs selected S Armani Watts with the 124th overall pick in the fourth round and CB Tremon Smith with the 196th overall pick in the sixth round.

With their final draft choice of 2018 the Chiefs selected G Kahlil McKenzie with the 198th overall pick of the sixth round. Although McKenzie was a defensive tackle throughout college, the Chiefs drafted him with the idea of transforming him into an offensive lineman. The selection of McKenzie made for a record all-defensive draft for the Chiefs going into 2018.

CHIEFS COACHING STAFF CHANGES

The club continued to add to the coaching staff by hiring Deland McCullough to serve as the team's running backs coach, Jay Valai as a defensive quality control coach and David Girardi as the offensive quality control coach.

McCullough joins the Chiefs after spending the last eight years coaching in the collegiate ranks at USC (2017), Indiana (2011-16) and Miami of Ohio (2010). He spent two years as an NFL running back with the Bengals and the Eagles.

Valai joins the Chiefs coaching staff after spending the last two seasons as the University of Georgia's defensive quality control coach.

Girardi joins the Chiefs after seven years coaching at the collegiate level at Lafayette College (2017), Northwestern (2014-16), Geneva College (2013) and Seton Hill University (2011-12).

Additionally, this offseason, the club promoted Mike Kafka to quarterbacks coach after serving as the offensive quality control coach for the 2017 season. Mike Smith and Mark DeLeone were named the outside linebackers and inside linebackers coaches, respectively. Smith previously served as the assistant defensive line coach (2016-17) and DeLeone served as the club's assistant linebackers coach (2015-17) and defensive quality control coach (2013-14). After serving two seasons (2016-17) as the club's offensive quality control coach, Joe Bleymaier was promoted to the passing game analyst/assistant quarterbacks coach. Terry Bradden was also named a defensive quality control coach after serving as the team's defensive assistant in 2017. Corey Matthaei is now the assistant offensive line coach after serving as the assistant quarterbacks coach from 2015-17.

NEW YEAR NEW CHIEFS

Led by 23-year-old Patrick Mahomes at quarterback the 2018 Chiefs have an average age of 25.8 years old. This offseason, GM Brett Veach made significant moves to attract young talent to the Kansas City Chiefs like 25-year-old WR Sammy Watkins, 26-year-old LB Anthony Hitchens, 26-year-old DT Xavier Williams and 23-year-old CB Kendall Fuller.

"We have a lot of talent here," Veach said. "It's a lot of young talent which is exciting for the fans, but we realize there may be some growing pains, but we have guys that can straight up play football and they're exciting."

With the loss of veteran linebackers Derrick Johnson and Tamba Hali, the Chiefs are looking to their young talent to lead the team more than ever. After 13 seasons with the Chiefs, Johnson and the club decided to part ways following the 2017 season. Johnson left the Chiefs as the team's all-time leading tackler compiling 1,262 career stops (993 solo). Following a 12-year NFL career all spent with Kansas City, Hali will go down as one of the most successful pass rushers in franchise history.

Under the guidance of veteran linebacker Justin Houston, young talent like Anthony Hitchens, third-year LB Reggie Ragland and rookie linebacker and second-round draft pick Breeland Speaks have a chance to make a name for themselves in honor of Chiefs legends Derrick Johnson and Tamba Hali.

"Whether it's the quarterback position, inside linebacker position, outside linebacker position, you're missing a few of those guys and you have new guys coming in that you have an opportunity to see perform," Reid said. "That's exciting to me, I'm looking forward to that."

Protected by a veteran offensive line, second-year QB Patrick Mahomes has multiple young offensive weapons at his disposal. With the addition of WR Sammy Watkins, Mahomes also has third-year WR Tyreek Hill and sixth-year TE Travis Kelce to make up, arguably, one of the NFL's most dynamic offensive units.

In what some might have considered a transition year early on, Reid and the Chiefs are makeing an impact in 2018.

When speaking about his expectations for the 2018 Chiefs, Reid said, "We're striving to win a championship and then to consistently be in a position where we can win a championship as the years go on. And it starts today."

PRO FOOTBALL HALL OF FAMER EMMITT THOMAS

Pro Football Hall of Fame Cornerback Emmitt Thomas is in his ninth season as defensive backs coach with the Kansas City Chiefs. Thomas works alongside former NFL Cornerback Al Harris, who joined the Chiefs as a defensive assistant/secondary coach in 2013. Harris was promoted to Secondary/Cornerbacks Coach in 2016.

One of the best defenders in Chiefs history, Thomas finished his career with 58 interceptions – a Chiefs record – as well as five defensive touchdowns in 181 games, all with Kansas City. Thomas holds the Chiefs record for interception return yardage with 937 yards.

Thomas was a member of the Chiefs Super Bowl IV Championship squad and was elected to the Chiefs Hall of Fame in 1986 and the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 2008.

THE FIRST LADY OF FOOTBALL

Norma Hunt continues to play an integral part of the Chiefs in Kansas City. She owns the distinction of being the only woman known to have attended all 52 Super Bowls and was selected to preside over the coin toss at Super Bowl XLI along with Pro Football Hall of Fame quarterback Dan Marino. She is involved in numerous philanthropic and civic efforts in Kansas City and Texas. Her late husband, Lamar Hunt, was the guiding force behind the formation of the Kansas City Chiefs and the American Football League and was inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1972. He, with the help of his family, coined the term "Super Bowl."

Hunt, along with her daughter-in-law Tavia Hunt and granddaughters Gracie and Ava Hunt all participate in the NFL Women's Apparel advertising campaigns. The Hunts have been featured alongside other female NFL leaders such as Charlotte Jones Anderson (Dallas Cowboys Executive Vice President/Chief Brand Officer and NFL Foundation chair), Suzanne Johnson (wife of New York Jets owner Woody Johnson) and Tanya Snyder (wife of Washington Redskins owner Dan Snyder).

CWO SERVES LUNCH AT RONALD MCDONALD HOUSE

On Wednesday, Jan. 9, the Chiefs Women's Organization (CWO) – which is made up of wives and significant others of Chiefs players, coaches and staff - served lunch and participated in crafting activities in order to spread some postseason cheer among the families at the Ronald McDonald House of Kansas City.

"One of the things that people don't always realize about the Ronald McDonald House is that it's not just a bed – it's a meal and the support that you need while your child is sick," said Tami Greenberg, CEO of Ronald McDonald House Charities of Kansas City. "Having the CWO here today means a ton because our families aren't only getting the lunch that they need, but they're also feeling the support of the community. To be here means that your family is going through a hard time, so to feel that support is powerful."

"The entire Chiefs organization – including the CWO – cares tremendously about this community," Kathy Donovan, wife of Chiefs President Mark Donovan, said. "What's so great about the Ronald McDonald House is that they create this environment that's very supportive and that lifts these individuals up. There's a sense of community here, and it's important to be a part of something positive during a hard time."

TONY GONZALEZ NAMED FINALIST FOR PFHOF

Tony Gonzalez is one step closer to Canton. The 14-time Pro Bowler was named a finalist for the Pro Football Hall of Fame on Thursday Jan. 3, joining 14 other modern-era finalists.

Gonzalez, who was enshrined in the Chiefs Ring of Honor earlier this season, finished his career with the most career receptions (1,325), receiving yards (15,127) and 100-yard receiving games (31) by a tight end in NFL history, and the second-most touchdown receptions (111) behind only Los Angeles Chargers TE Antonio Gates (116).

Additionally, Gonzalez's 1,325 career receptions are second to only Pro Football Hall of Fame wide receiver Jerry Rice (1,549) for the most in NFL history.

It was previously announced that senior finalist S Johnny Robinson, who spent his entire career with the Texans/Chiefs franchise from 1960-71, will also be included in the voting process.

The finalists will be presented to the Hall of Fame Selection Committee the day prior to the Super Bowl in Atlanta.

CHIEFS SURPRISE PAIR WITH SUPER BOWL TICKETS

A pair of close friends made their way onto the Arrowhead grass before the Chiefs took on the Raiders on Sunday, Dec. 30, keen on watching the Kansas City Chiefs prepare for their regular season finale.

There was teenage Sean, a local high school student and aspiring young athlete who hopes to play college football at Kansas State someday, and his big brother, Charles Pigneri, here on this chilly December afternoon - though these two are not related by blood.

Pigneri took Sean under his wing six years ago as part of the Big Brothers Big Sisters program, which seeks to serve young people in need of positive role models in their lives.

That's meant weekly interactions - from trips to the movies or out to eat - and, of course, to nearly all of Sean's athletic endeavors. It's the kind of dedication that earned Pigneri "Big Brother of the Year" honors in 2017.

"Our relationship has meant a lot to me. We've gone through a couple of location moves – I'm down in south Johnson County and he's over in Independence – but we've kept the relationship really strong," Pigneri said. "I try to get together with him once a week to do a number of things, and now that he's involved in football, basketball and track, I try to make as many of his sporting events as I can."

"I called Charles and told him that [Chiefs Chairman and CEO] Clark Hunt really admires our program and wanted to treat some Bigs and Littles to a game," said Micheal Lawrence, CEO of Big Brothers Big Sisters Kansas City. "I told him I just had two questions, 'Are you available this Sunday and, if we coordinate a Super Bowl watch party, would you be available?"

Little did the pair know, but the latter question was only to assure that schedules would be cleared for the Feb. 3 weekend, and just before Pigneri and Sean headed to the stands, Hunt delivered the news.

"He went, 'I have one little surprise for you guys before you head up to your seats," Pigneri recalled. "Sean and I just looked at each other and asked what he had for us. He goes, 'How would you two like to go to the Super Bowl on us?"

"It was just surreal. We did not see that one coming," Pigneri said. "It was just awesome. We posted some pictures on Facebook and we've had more than 300 people comment on it."

TONY GONZALEZ INDUCTED INTO THE CHIEFS HALL OF FAME

When the Chiefs hosted the Los Angeles Chargers on Thursday, Dec. 13, former Chiefs TE Tony Gonzalez was inducted into the Chiefs Hall of Fame. Gonzalez is the 48th individual and 3rd tight end inducted.

The evening began with a reception hosted by the Hunt family for Gonzalez, others Chiefs Legends and their families. Trent Green, Dante Hall and Priest Holmes were among those of Gonzalez's former teammates in attendance. Following the reception, Gonzalez led the raucous Arrowhead crowd in the drum ceremony prior to kickoff.

At halftime, Chiefs Chairman and CEO Clark Hunt joined Gonzalez and his family on the field for the official ceremony. Gonzalez was presented a framed 88 Chiefs jersey and his name was unveiled on the stadium facade.

Even after the ceremony, the magnitude of the honor hadn't truly set in for the now-Hall of Fame tight end.

"I'm pinching myself that I'm able to go out and look up and see these fans and see my name in that Ring of Honor now with Len Dawson and Bobby Bell and Derrick Thomas," Gonzalez said. "It's overwhelming and I'm blessed and I'm happy to be here."

The Impact that Gonzalez had on the franchise was not lost on Hunt, either.

"Tony Gonzalez is the greatest tight end in the history of the National Football League and one of the greatest Chiefs of all time," Hunt said. "In his 12 seasons in Kansas City, he revolutionized his position, and his record-breaking performances and commitment to the Kansas City community made him one of the most beloved players in the Chiefs Kingdom."

At the end of Gonzalez's illustrious career, he was among the top 10 of almost every major receiving category in NFL history, not just among tight ends. He currently ranks second in receptions, sixth in receiving yards and eighth in receiving touchdowns.

GONZALEZ OWNS THE RECORD BOOK

Chiefs Hall of Fame TE Tony Gonzalez is at the top of almost every receiving category in Chiefs history, including receptions, yards and touchdowns. He also ranks in the top 5 in games played for the club.

CHIEFS FANS SET WORLD RECORD

On Monday, Sept. 29, 2014, Kansas City defeated the New England Patriots 41-14, and Chiefs fans set a Guinness World Record for Loudest Crowd Roar at a Sports Stadium (Outdoors). Chiefs fans reached a peak decibel reading of 142.2 as Guinness World Records adjudicator Philip Robertson monitored the sound levels. The mark was set early in the contest while the club was on defense. The Arrowhead Stadium record passed the old record of 137.5 decibels and broke Seattle's record of 137.6. The Chiefs still hold the record nearly four years later.

THE ARROWHEAD ADVANTAGE

"The fans, they're phenomenal. 142.2 decibels, I never thought I would be fired up (for) decibel levels but I'm fired up for them. My ears are still ringing, I mean it was loud, loud down there. Like incredibly loud."

- Chiefs Head Coach Andy Reid

"It's a great feeling (playing at Arrowhead). On 3rd-and-long when you hear the crowd and you see the opposing quarterback yelling, trying to change the play and struggling to communicate with the offensive linemen. That's a great feeling because you know your percentage of getting a sack just went up. I love playing in front of our fans."

- LB Justin Houston

"A legendary environment like that at Arrowhead Stadium is something else. We're excited about it, we respect it, we realize that the environment is an issue and an element of play and it's something that we need to be prepared for and ultimately combat."

- Steelers Head Coach Mike Tomlin

TEREZ A. PAYLOR

Kansas City Star

February 24, 2018

As the airplane descended into Kansas City, just hours before the 47th annual 101 Awards, Tony Gonzalez allowed himself to reminisce, not only about his 41 years on this earth, but also about the 12 seasons he spent as a Chief.

Gonzalez, the 13th overall pick in the 1997 NFL Draft and this year's inductee in the Chiefs' Ring of Honor, doesn't get back here much, so he couldn't help but marvel at how much he, and the city, has changed.

For one, there's way more to do downtown than there was back then, he said, back when he and his teammates celebrated the opening of chain restaurants like P.F. Chang's and Cheesecake Factory.

But his personal change, in retrospect, is stunning, he admitted. The former star tight end has come a long way since his rookie year, when he dropped 17 passes as a rookie, the most in the NFL, and was ripped by former Kansas City Star columnist Jason Whitlock in his uber-popular year-end grades.

"He gave me a D-minus in the paper, and said that it was another bust by the Kansas City Chiefs," Gonzalez reminisced with a laugh while at the 101 Awards banquet at the Westin Crown Center.

But in retrospect, Gonzalez added, it was the best thing that ever happened to him. So was the booing at Arrowhead that year from fans fed up with his focus drops.

"Talk about growth," Gonzalez said. "When you hit the hard times in your life, that's when you find out what you're made of. And Iremember I made the decision I was never going to hear that sound (of boos) again, I would never be outworked.

"Up until that point, I wasn't staying after practice, I wasn't showing up early. I wasn't catching balls while the defense was going. I was doing what I was told to do, working hard, but nothing extra. And that's what it takes. That's what greatness is all about."

Gonzalez learned this by watching former Chiefs greats like Will Shields, Tony Richardson, Marcus Allen and Warren Moon, and after he embraced their ethos, a superstar was born.

"It changed everything for me," Gonzalez said.

Gonzalez nearly doubled his receptions and receiving yards as a second-year pro, and officially took off in 1999 when he made the first of 14 Pro Bowls and first of six All-Pro teams during a killer 17-year career that was spurred by his newfound understanding of the essence of manhood once his career got off to a rocky start.

"I became a man out here in Kansas City," Gonzalez said. "The tough times, the storms are coming, but it's what you do when you're going through that storm, the decisions you make, that can change your life and make it unbelievable. Because the sun's gonna come out and make it a great time."

Gonzalez's tenure in Kansas City came to an end after the 2008 season, when Gonzalez — sick of the constant losing and, at 31 years old, entering the tail end of his prime — finally requested a trade.

"I didn't want to leave; I was scared," Gonzalez said. "I was scared about the reaction from the fans, I was scared about the reaction from my teammates."

Still, he knew he needed to risk his comfort in Kansas City for a better situation. He found it in Atlanta, where he went to the playoffs and played in an NFC Championship game while the Chiefs used the second-round pick they got from the Falcons for Gonzalez on cornerback Javier Arenas, who played for six teams across a seven-year career.

"If I would have stayed here ... the Todd Haley years did not work out for them here," Gonzalez said. "It worked out for me."

But Gonzalez still feels the love from Chiefs fans, which is all that matters to him.

"I feel just as much as a Chief as if I'd stayed here my whole career," Gonzalez said. "I still feel loved by the fans here, and I love them, and it's good to be back here."

Though the club has not moved to retire Gonzalez's number — the club has an overall shortage of numbers, as the Chiefs have already retired 10 jersey numbers, which is among the most in the NFL — Chiefs chairman Clark Hunt hinted that Gonzalez's looming first year of eligibility for the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 2019 played a role in the franchise's desire to honor him this year.

"Since he's going to have to get used to hearing Hall of Fame connected to his name over the next couple of years, it's our honor to be the first," Hunt said.

Gonzalez's Hall resume is strong. He set franchise records for receptions, receiving yards, receiving touchdowns and 100-yard games, and he also set NFL records for career receptions, receiving yards and 100-yard receiving games for tight ends.

Gonzalez is also the first tight end in league history to produce 16 consecutive seasons with 50 or more receptions, and his 1,325 career receptions are the second-most all-time, at any position, only behind the great Jerry Rice.

"He was always putting in extra time after practice, catching balls or running routes," Hunt said. "His relentless drive helped him become the best tight end in the history of the game."

Gonzalez owes it all to that rough start with the Chiefs, a memory he embraces to this day due to all the ways it's benefited him.

"I wouldn't change it for anything, honestly," Gonzalez said. "It made the person I am now, and what I'm doing with my life with my wife and my kids. I owe it all to Kansas City, and being that 13th pick overall in 1997.

"To be able to go up in that Ring of Honor and be listed with all those guys, whew, it's amazing. Couldn't ask for anything more."

Behind the Scenes: Chiefs offer rare glimpse of concussion procedures

James Dornbrook

Kansas City Business Journal

June 15, 2018

With the National Football League coming off its worst season for concussions in recorded history, the Kansas City Chiefs offered a rare, behind-the-scenes glimpse of their medical procedures to address the problem.

The NFL started recording concussions in 2012. Last season ended with more than 600 concussion protocol examinations performed and 281 concussions diagnosed. The previous record was 275 in 2015.

The NFL now has a fairly complex system in place to address the safety issues related to concussions, and the league continues to work on improving it. Yet the NFL still has a poor reputation on the matter, thanks to a long history of denial.

Denial to addressing

The league created the Mild Traumatic Brain Injury Committee in 1994 and appointed rheumatologist Elliot Pellman as chairman, even though he had zero experience in brain science. The committee then spent years denying every scientific report linking multiple concussions to dementia and chronic traumatic encephalopathy (CTE), and avoiding taking serious action until 2009.

Since then, the league has done a lot to address the problem. Today, the concussion identification, evaluation, treatment and recording system in the NFL is state of the art and being copied by other professional sports. Jeff Miller, the NFL's executive vice president of health and safety policy, conducted a rare tour to show how the system works at Arrowhead Stadium.

Previously, the system relied on referees and trainers to make decisions, but today it also includes five people hired by the league who work nine stories above the field.

Two are trainers with binoculars, one for each team, watching for any signs of concussion or injury. Two are video technicians who have their own game feeds and study every play, tagging any play that results in injury. The fifth person in the booth is an unaffiliated central neurotrauma consultant who is a medical professional with experience in concussions.

The booth can call down to the field and order a player to be evaluated and also has the power to contact the referee through his earpiece and call for a medical timeout to make sure a player is evaluated before returning to play. The booth can send video replays down to the field for trainers to see, allowing them to gain more information for making an evaluation.

Players initially are evaluated in a little blue tent set up on the sidelines. If a doctor determines the need for further evaluation, the player is sent to the locker room.

The Kelce incident

Rick Burkholder, vice president of sports medicine and performance for the Chiefs, shared an example of how the system works by citing the concussion suffered by Travis Kelce during a playoff game against the Tennessee Titans in January.

"In the Kelce play, when he went down and we ran out onto the field, one of the players whispered in my ear that he wasn't talking right," Burkholder said. "Head Coach Andy Reid, who has the best view of the field, said to me, 'I know he's done for the day.' By the time I got there, he was communicating fine. But we already had several red flags. Then I saw the video, and I saw Kelce stagger. After Kelce came off the field, you might remember him skipping and waving his hands at the fans. None of that matters to us. There were four red flags through the system, the spotters, a teammate, the coach and video. So we took him straight into the locker room."

Still, the system has suffered breakdowns. The Seattle Seahawks-Arizona Cardinals game on Nov. 9 offers a prime example. Seahawks quarterback Russell Wilson was sent to the sidelines by the referee for concussion evaluation. Wilson entered the blue tent but within seconds jumped out and went back into the game. It was a violation of the policy, and the team was fined $100,000.

Burkholder said teams violated the procedure only three times last season.

"The whole world knew about the three instances, but no one talked about the hundreds of others that worked properly," Burkholder said.

Once a player goes to the locker room for further evaluation, he is put into a special room with a door that can close to eliminate sound and control light, both of which exacerbate concussion symptoms. The team doctor then follows a checklist of procedures to determine whether the player can return to the game.

The league also focuses on prevention, changing kickoff and tackling rules to eliminate the most dangerous plays. The league studies helmets to find the best ones for concussion prevention and started banning those that don't measure up.

"This was based on testing by engineers based on a variety of impact angles and speeds," Miller said.

"The helmets were then ranked by performance. A year ago, of the five highest-rated helmets, four were new entrants to the market. So the manufacturers are upping their game and making changes for the better and helping us out."

Drought is over: Chiefs beat Colts, will play for AFC championship, Super Bowl berth

Brooke Pryor

Kansas City Star

JANUARY 12, 2019

This is where it was supposed to go wrong. This is where the Chiefs' bid to play host to their first AFC Championship Game would start to slip away.

Receiver Sammy Watkins, playing in his first game in nearly two months, caught his sixth pass of the day with a minute left in the third quarter. On his way down, though, Watkins lost the ball as Colts linebacker Darius Leonard knocked it loose and then snatched it out from under Watkins.

Down just three scores Saturday at Arrowhead Stadium, the Colts were now on the 20-yard line. The collapse could've been starting.

But this is another year and another time.

This time, things broke the Chiefs' way in their 31-13 win over the Colts. It was like decades of karma finally came back around and helped the Chiefs break the cycle of sadness that's plagued them for the better part of 25 years.

The Colts had the ball for all of two plays before Chiefs linebackers Justin Houston and Dee Ford combined to write their own history and break from the tradition of the past.

Ford sacked Luck at the 20, freeing the ball in the process, and Houston recovered it.

Chiefs' ball, Chiefs' game.

There was still another quarter to play, 15 more minutes for the worst to happen. But it didn't.

Now, an AFC Championship Game — and a chance to avenge one of their four losses — against the winner of Sunday's Patriots-Chargers game awaits the Chiefs next week.

"We're such a different team," quarterback Patrick Mahomes said when asked about the previously doomed playoff history of the franchise. "We have such young players that we have so much confidence going in that we're going to win every single game.

"We want to play at this stadium. We want to win at Arrowhead Stadium. We get the opportunity to play here again next week."

Surrounded by more than 76,000 souls teeming with nervous energy, the Chiefs came out calm and collected from the opening coin toss. With snow flurries swirling over Arrowhead and piles of the white stuff piled against the retaining walls surrounding the field, the Chiefs executed a game plan that's worked since early in the season.

Like they did the first nine weeks of the season, Chiefs won the coin toss and deferred. And like many of those times, the defense got off the field quickly, forcing the Colts into the first of four consecutive three-and-outs.

It was the first time since a regular-season game against Tennessee in 2013 that the Chiefs' defense forced four consecutive three-and-outs.

With Andrew Luck and Colts offense off the field, the Chiefs offense went to work. Mahomes (27 of 41, 278 yards) orchestrated three straight scoring drives to give the Chiefs a 17-0 lead with 12:13 to go in the second.

Mahomes, a Texas native, said it was the first time he had played a game in the snow.

"I actually thought it was pretty cool," he said. "I thought I was spinning it well."

Running back Damien Williams capped the first three-minute drive with a 10-yard scoring run, and he came up big in the next one, too. He converted the first of four fourth-down attempts by Reid to set up for Tyreek Hill's 36-yard touchdown.

Williams (24 carries, 125 yards, 1 TD) was Reid's short-yardage weapon of choice again on the following drive, converting on another fourth down that eventually led to Harrison Butker's 39-yard field goal.

Then, a moment late in the second gurater that might've started a collapse any other season.

Dustin Colquitt, punting for the first time all game, had his punt blocked — his first blocked punt since 2013 and just his fifth ever — for a touchdown to cut the Chiefs' lead to 10. It was the kind of play that could swing the momentum of the game away from the Chiefs — the kind that has before.

But this team isn't living or playing in the past. With Mahomes, the Chiefs are a team with a future.

"People talk about the history, but you re-write history, man," Chiefs lineman Cam Erving said. "You can't focus on the past. You have to continue moving forward. And we got the right guys to continue doing it."

The Chiefs didn't crumple under their misfortune. Instead, Mahomes responded with a four-yard touchdown run to cap a 4 minute, 16 second drive in the waning minutes of the first half to give his team a 24-7 lead with just less than two minutes to play.

Luck tried to orchestrate an uptempo, less-than-two minute drive. With back-to-back throws, he finally helped his team pick up its first first down of the half. He completed two more first-down passes in the drive to put the Colts inside the Chiefs' 10-yard-line. With time running out and Luck unable to find someone in the end zone, Indy brought out Adam Vinatieri, usually such an automatic weapon, to kick a field goal with time expiring.

But then the Colts suffered their own special teams miscue as Vinatieri missed a 23-yard field goal — his shortest field-goal miss ever. Before that, he was a perfect 97-of-97 on attempts of 23 yards or shorter.

With that, the Chiefs went into halftime with a 24-7 lead and the ball to start the second half.

The Chiefs wouldn't score immediately after halftime, but they opened with a six-minute drive to chew up clock and keep Luck off the field.

With Chiefs' the offense stagnating, the defense came out and matched the intensity it had in the first half and forced the Colts off the field after a handful of plays. It was a statement game for the maligned defense.

"We're a family," Houston said. "We're going to stick together no matter what people are saying."

The Colts had another chance to claw back in the game when Hill muffed the Colts' ensuing punt. With the Colts swarming the loose ball, rookie Tremon Smith dove and recovered it. Another potential momentum-swinging play erased.

The Kansas City Chiefs beat the Indianapolis Colts 31-13 in an AFC divisional playoff game Saturday night at Arrowhead Stadium, their first home playoff win in 25 years.

By Shelly Yang

The Chiefs' defense, which has given up just nine points in the last two games, continued to hold the Colts at bay in the second half. Indianapolis picked up just 263 yards of offense. The Chiefs also kept the Colts from converting any of their nine third-down opportunities. Luck completed 19 of 36 passes for 162 yards and a touchdown.

Of course, the Chiefs couldn't escape all the late-game drama on Saturday. The Colts scored a touchdown with 5:37 left on a 29-yard strike from Luck to T.Y. Hilton, but Vinatieri missed the extra point. With the kicker's compounded struggles, the Chiefs maintained an 11-point lead instead of a seven-point one.

Then, rookie Darrel Williams sealed the door shut on the Colts, muscling his way into the end zone for his second career touchdown with 2:23 left. Any last shred of tension in the stands evaporated. The crowd hooted and hollered and threw snowballs in celebration and started hitting the exits.

After all, there wasn't a need to linger for a long goodbye. They'd be back next week.

With a new coach in charge of their position, Justin Houston and the Chiefs' outside linebackers aim to be relentless

Nate Taylor
The Athletic
June 4. 2018

Smith knew if Houston, the team's top pass rusher, agreed with his idea, its impact could be felt throughout the new outside linebackers meeting room — and perhaps on the field this season. During his seven-year career, Houston has terrorized opposing quarterbacks as the Chiefs' left outside linebacker, bull rushing, spinning and bending his body to discard the opponent's right tackle.

But Smith wants Houston to try a new strategy. Still be a dominant presence, Smith told Houston, but do it from everywhere on the field. Doing so would make Houston — and, as a result, the entire Chiefs' defense — less predictable. Smith desires for Houston to be matched up against the opponent's worst offensive lineman this season, which he believes will create more opportunities for the defense to create havoc.

Houston, eager to help reinvigorate the Chiefs' beleaguered defense, has agreed to fulfill Smith's request.

"I want to be able to attack the weakest link," he said last month, repeating Smith's message to him. "Every team is different. Everybody's left tackle isn't All-Pro; everybody's right tackle isn't All-Pro. Wherever the weakest link — if it's the guard, center or even tackle — I want to be on the weakest link."

Typical for many assistants, Smith said Thursday that the position he coaches — which features key players such as Houston, Dee Ford, rookie Breeland Speaks, Tanoh Kpassagnon and rookie Dorian O'Daniel — is the defense's most important. Smith's argument, given the circumstances surrounding the Chiefs' remodeled 3-4 defense, is a convincing one.

Smith referenced how defensive coordinator Bob Sutton uses his outside linebackers to do everything: rush the passer, set the edge against the run and provide support to the secondary with occasional zone coverage. Since his linebackers are already asked to do so much, Smith said it's not unreasonable for players such as Houston and Ford to line up at different positions for different scenarios to give opposing offenses different looks.

"That's how you should be on defense, period," said Smith, who is entering his third season with Chiefs. "If it's a (defensive) coordinator, you break it down. But ask me, you just can't get comfortable on one side. For Dee, it's the same deal. If there's a tackle that's bigger and a little bit slower, Dee's got one of the best get-offs in the league. Go line up on him. If there's a tackle a little bit smaller, Justin, go tear him up a little bit. That's kind of what we'll do."

Before becoming a coach, Smith was a linebacker for the Baltimore Ravens for four seasons. In 2012, Smith learned under Sutton when both men coached the linebacker positions for the New York Jets.

Prior to his promotion, Smith began working more with the outside linebackers during the second half of last season. Coach Andy Reid shifted Smith into his new role, along with assistant Mark DeLeone being responsible for inside linebackers, to give players more individual attention. The goal is for Smith to help provide better film study meetings and in-game adjustments specific to the outside linebackers.

"That's a big position to just have one person doing, so we did split it up and it seems to be working fine," Reid said Thursday. "The outside position in the 3-4 defense and the inside linebacker position are completely different spots."

Houston praised Reid for elevating Smith, and the Chiefs' investment in the coach has already produced positive results since Houston's attitude toward Smith's coaching has influenced his younger teammates at the position. Beyond assisting Houston, Smith will be responsible for getting Speaks, who played defensive end at Mississippi, acclimated to his new position.

"Things come natural to him," Smith said of Speaks. "The thing with him, like a 4-3 end, they're not used to dropping (in coverage). For him to pick it up this quick, and at least get a feel for, it's pretty good. The thing I like about him is he can do it, especially the drop stuff."

Smith and Houston are both impressed with Speaks' demeanor. Smith said Speaks carries himself in practice like a veteran instead of a rookie. Houston has been encouraged by how quickly Speaks has understood the Chiefs' playbook and how he fits within Sutton's scheme from his position.

"He's very smart to be able to play defensive end and then come in and learn outside linebacker," Houston said of Speaks. "A lot of guys you see in the NFL struggle switching. He's picking up the defense fine, and he's looked good in coverage. I think he's going to help us a lot."

Last year, sacks was a glaring statistic for the Chiefs. They recorded just 24 of them, which ranked 24th in the NFL.

Smith knows his linebackers need to be playmakers to ensure Sutton's defense is more potent. The Chiefs, though, will need more production from outside linebackers not named Houston and Ford. Smith hopes Kpassagnon, a second-year player, can become a reliable contributor after getting more snaps toward the end of last season.

"He's making big strides," Smith said. "We all know T.K. is a little raw. He's got long arms. He can scratch his ankles standing up. He's just got to get better at using his arms and keeping people off of him. I truly believe he's got a bright future. He's just got to continue to learn."

As his conversations with Houston and other players continue, Smith said he will likely rely on one word to keep players motivated. Above all, he needs his linebackers, wherever they line up, to be relentless.

"A lot of your sacks come off of second and third effort, especially at this level," he said. "These tackles are big and good. Obviously you've got to have good technique but be relentless. I think one of the great things about Tamba (Hali), that's what he was. Obviously his technique is good, but you just can't stop."

Chiefs' Emmitt Thomas wins lifetime achievement honor from pro football writers

Matt Derrick

Chiefs Digest

June 19, 2018

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Longtime Chiefs defensive backs coach Emmitt Thomas and former Washington offensive line coach Joe Bugel are the recipients of this year's Paul "Dr. Z" Zimmerman Award, a lifetime achievement honor presented annually by the Professional Football Writers of America (PFWA).

Thomas, also a member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame as a player for the Chiefs from 1966 to 1978, started his coaching career in 1979 at Central Missouri State. He spent time with Washington, Philadelphia, Green Bay and Atlanta in various roles including assistant coach, wide receivers and defensive backs coach and defensive coordinator. He also served as interim head coach of the Falcons for four games in the 2007 after the resignation of Bobby Petrino.

Thomas, 75, returned to Kansas City as defensive backs coach in 2010 under head coach Todd Haley, and remained a part of the staff for both Romeo Crennel and Andy Reid. He was inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 2008

Bugel spent five seasons as a head coach during stints with the then Phoenix Cardinals and Oakland Raiders but built his reputation as an assistant, most notably as offensive line coach for Washington from 1981-89. The team's offensive line — known as the "Hogs" — carried Washington to three NFC titles and two Super Bowl wins.

Bugel and Thomas spent four seasons together in Washington, during which time the team won Super Bowl XXII. Each coach holds two Super Bowl rings as an assistant, all coming from their time with Washington.

Chiefs assistant head coach and special teams coordinator Dave Toub was also a nominee for this year's award. Other nominees were the late Bobb McKittrick, a longtime assistant for Bill Walsh, and Jim McNally, former offensive line coach for Cincinnati, Carolina, New York Giants and Buffalo.

The Dr. Z Award is presented by the PFWA for lifetime achievement as an assistant coach in the NFL. The award is named for Zimmerman, who covered the NFL for 29 years as Sports Illustrated's lead pro football writer.

Past winners of the Paul "Dr. Z" Zimmerman Award:

2014: Jim Johnson, Howard Mudd, Fritz Shurmur and Ernie Zampese

2015: Dick LeBeau, Tom Moore and Dante Scarnecchia

2016: Monte Kiffin and Wade Phillips

2018: Joe Bugel and Emmitt Thomas

(Porter Ellett)

Losing an arm helped make this Chiefs assistant coach who he is

Vahe Gregorian

ST. JOSEPH

As senior assistant to the head coach for the Chiefs, Porter Ellett might as well be Andy Reid's shadow. Maybe you've seen him nearby during practice or games and wondered about the guy Reid is apt to call his "left-hand man."

The joke reflects the nature of their relationship, a little-known aspect of Reid's own life and what makes Ellett who he is: a man who had his right arm amputated as a teen, believes he's better off for it and is distinguished most by his intelligence, zeal for life and sense of humor.

It's those personal traits that resonate with an admiring Reid, who calls Ellett "quite a person," and make Ellett well-suited for his second year orbiting a coach whose brother Reggie has long-contended with an injury of a similar nature.

If Ellett doesn't quite bunk with Reid at training camp, he's alongside virtually every waking moment to attend to ... whatever: from the clerical stuff of building playbooks and call sheets to Reid's administrative work to miscellaneous projects behind the scenes.

"I can be rough on you a little bit in that position; he's got a tremendous amount of responsibility," Reid said. "And so when the best of my red hairs get to me, he handles it and smooths it out and just kind of calms the storm."

It's grinding work but an incredible opportunity to absorb the profession. Previously in the same capacity, Reid employed current Chiefs general manager Brett Veach and Buffalo head coach Sean McDermott; Ellett has playfully jousted with each about who has performed better, and he could follow in either direction.

There's no way to know if his future holds those sorts of high-profile positions, but his presence here is momentous in itself: It's testament to a special spirit forged when Ellett was 4 years old and might well have died in the accident on the family farm in Loa, Utah.

It would have been challenge enough to land this NFL job with enormous growth potential coming from a remote rural town of about 600 and a high school that didn't have enough kids for a football team.

Making it with one arm was something else entirely, something that speaks to intense resolve and how his family navigated the aftermath of the mishap that day: In the back of a Ford F-150 with older kids after moving sheep to the summer range, Ellett crawled up on a motorcycle in the bed and was thrown out when the truck hit a bump.

His skull was cracked and his head scalped, as he put it. That wasn't the worst of it. Extreme nerve damage, known as a brachial plexus injury, was inflicted on his right arm, rendering it what he calls dead and ultimately compelling him to have it amputated when he was 16.

By then, though, he had long since come to terms with his arm. So a day after the amputation, still bleeding some, he played pickup basketball.

"It was kind of like when you get new cleats, or a new ball," he said. "'Let's try this out, let's see what this is like.'"

That mindset reflected both his innate attitude and how his parents reacted to the trauma of the accident. His mother, Mary, remembers counting her blessings that he was simply alive with no brain damage, and they set about living what happens to be one of Reid's mantras: roll with it.

"They taught me, 'It's up to you,' " Ellett said. "There was no victim mentality ever. This is a super-bad pun, but it's the hand life deals you, so you do what you can with it."

Painful as it was for them, that meant letting him struggle to find his way at times.

"No one ever expected anything different from him than anyone else his age," his father, Jan, said.

Ellett has always loved sports, even when he was a small child growing up in Utah.

Still bearing stitches in his head from the accident, for instance, Ellett tried in vain to climb a fence with his friends. Seeking help, he turned to his mother.

She said, "No: If you want to do it, figure it out."

"And I got over it," he said, later adding, "I'd say it was real love. I think we have a misconception of what love is today. Love isn't giving people what they want. It's giving them what they need.

"I didn't have, like, 'I'll lift you over the fence.' (But) you could say, their love lifted me over."

Thanks to a strong support system, including five sisters who never coddled him, Ellett became a really good athlete. Having one functional arm somehow became an afterthought.

At one of his baseball games, his mother remembers thinking, "There's a boy out there with one arm. ... Oh, it's Porter."

In fact, he mastered the ability to bat with one hand and flip the ball from his glove to throw it. Except, that is, when he pitched. Then he'd leave the glove on the ground before him for throws back from the catcher. But there was no time to use it to field.

It seems telling that he relished that challenge.

"There's nothing quite like the rush of pitching with no glove," he said, smiling. "If you make a mistake and they hit it back at you, that's on you. So it was always like, be unhittable, right?"

Basketball led to the decision to amputate. His atrophied right arm had become increasingly problematic. And not just because it had gotten to the point where he might accidentally slap somebody with it when he was dribbling or getting called for pushoffs.

"I'd look at the ref (and say), 'My arm doesn't move, so I'm not really pushing off,' " he said, laughing.

Ellett was an accomplished baseball player into his teens.

Even with scant sensation in in it, though, he'd felt the excruciating pain of it being broken several times. Then one night his sophomore year at Wayne High, he was sandwiched between defenders going for a rebound. His shoulder was dislocated, his elbow dislocated and broken.

For a while, he had wondered if something could be done to fix his arm. But he realized he knew how to do everything he wanted even without being able to use it. So on the long ride to the nearest hospital, he turned to his mother and said "Ah, let's cut it off; I'm not doing this anymore."

He tells this story with a laugh, and his mirthful way is infectious and ever-present. Every Halloween, for instance, Ellett and his wife, Carlie, have created costumes themed to the loss of an arm.

Once, he played Chubbs to Carlie's Happy Gilmore. Another time, he played "Soul Surfer" Bethany Hamilton, who lost her arm in a shark attack. So what if his female impersonation left something to be desired?

"I made for a mean shark," Carlie said, "so that probably made up for it."

Last year at the Chiefs' team Halloween party, they went with a Toy Story 2 theme. Ellett played Woody with his lost arm, Carlie was Jessie and Buzz Lightyear was played by now-14-month-old son Brigham. (The Mormon couple met at Brigham Young University, Reid's alma mater.)

"Might as well have fun with it," Ellett said. "If people see you smiling and enjoying life, it gives them hope."

Hope is why the modest Ellett consented to have his story told. When he asked Carlie about the idea, she said it would be worth it if even one kid contending with a perceived impediment reads about him.

"Porter's always been kind of this go-to (guy) to show people that just because something bad happens to you, and you don't physically look like everybody else, it doesn't mean your life's over," Carlie said. "You can overcome whatever faces you."

None of which should be confused with the idea that anything came easy for Ellett, 29. It's just that he accepted he'd have to work twice as hard to do everything ... then he did it.

Porter Ellett lost his arm when he was young, and he has some fun with that fact these days. He and his family dressed up as characters from the film Toy Story for a recent Halloween.

As much as he was loved in the community, he also had to come to terms with ridicule.

"When you're a kid and you're really different, it's hard, life's pretty rough," he said. "So I went through a time when I, like, legit hated people. I hated going out, and I hated being stared at and I hated being pointed at and I hated (hearing) comments: 'He's got one arm,' or 'he's a freak,' things like that. ...

"You go to, like, a dark place in life. I think you find out who you really are then."

Faith, friends and family helped. Including even the simplest gesture from Grandmother Shirley, who once gave him a picture frame with the words "Don't Quit" and DO IT.

At first, he kept it prominently displayed on his dresser just so maybe she'd see it and get him a better gift next time around.

Over time, though, the words came to mean something to him.

Especially during a rough period when he felt to blame for everything going wrong, including his father being fired as the basketball coach. He thought about quitting the team to "make them all happy."

Distraught, he lay on his bed and looked up at those words and had a revelation. He couldn't worry about what others think, couldn't keep them from staring. But when they did, he wanted them to see something special.

"That was a turning point, I think," said Ellett, who keeps that picture frame on his dresser to this day.

With that mentality grew the capacity for pursuing what might seem a far-fetched opportunity that came in a circuitous way.

From working in the BYU football equipment room, he fell in love with the game and decided to do whatever he could to work in it in some capacity.

After his mission in Los Angeles teaching Spanish, by chance he became friends with Devin Woodhouse, who taught Spanish at BYU's Missionary Training Center. Woodhouse is married to Reid's daughter Drew, and became a strength and conditioning assistant with the Chiefs.

Long story short, when Ellett was working on his master's degree in sports management at Baylor and came to a wedding here in 2016, that connection led to an invite to the Reid home after a game.

When Reid arrived, Ellett remembers some initial awkwardness because he was sitting in Reid's chair. Turns out Reid doesn't exactly see himself as having his own chair, Reid said, smiling, but "we made (Ellett) feel like I did."

After they got talking, Ellett told Reid, "I'd pay money just to follow you around and see how you coach. I want to learn from the best."

Reid told him to send a resume and a few months later called Ellett, who said he was shaking with nerves as he hoped for a short internship. Instead, Reid told him he had a full-time job available as his senior assistant and "for some reason you just keep coming to mind."

So Porter soon became Reid's "left-hand man," and there's more to the joke and chemistry that they share between them: Reggie Reid years ago lost the use of an arm in a motorcycle accident but didn't have it amputated. He went on to become accomplished in the martial arts — among other ways of his life that defied the gravity of the accident.

That understanding of his brother's ability to thrive despite the same sort of loss helps account for Reid seeing something in Ellett beyond his smarts and composure and energy.

"They just make it happen; that's what Porter does," he said. "The way he carries himself, you don't even notice" he's missing an arm.

With Carlie eight months pregnant, Ellett got the job offer on the Friday before the 2017 Super Bowl and started work two days later. Not easy for her. And for the second time, she left a good online marketing job (she soon found another here) to follow his dream.

But you could say her feeling about it was encapsulated in this moment: When Porter walked out of the Arrowhead Stadium tunnel with Reid for the preseason opener against San Francisco, she struggled to stay composed because of the joy she felt over his improbable journey.

The near-death experience cost him an arm, and you'd never wish that on anyone, yet in some ways it made him something more. He's a better person for the accident, he has told his father, and his mother knows he considers it a blessing — whatever the "odds" might say.

"I think it's important that kids understand that they should be the oddsmakers," Ellett said. "Like, you always hear, the odds, the chances, of doing this are one in a million.

"Well, why not be the one that does it? Why not set the odds for everybody else?"

(Eric Bieniemy)

Straight talker, deep listener: Eric Bieniemy makes an impression in new role as Chiefs' offensive coordinator

Nate Taylor

The Athletic

August 6, 2018

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. — As an orator, Eric Bieniemy loves his new job. One task Bieniemy enjoys about his new requirements as the Chiefs' new offensive coordinator is that he gets to move around even more on the practice fields during training camp. Among coach Andy Reid's staff, few assistants are as skillful as Bieniemy when it comes to spreading a message.

During a recent practice, Bieniemy roamed to every position on the offense as players went through drills — the very drills that, at times, can become dull. For Bieniemy, nothing about football is uneventful.

He began with the running backs and fullbacks, the positions he previously coached. Bieniemy shouted the same word — "Finish! Finish!" — as each ball carrier burst through the line of scrimmage, imploring them to complete the drill at full speed. With the receivers, Bieniemy looked at each in the face from a few yards away before they started their route. His persuasive message for Tyreek Hill, the dynamic and speedy third-year player, was simple: "The great ones don't take days off." With the offensive linemen, Bieniemy quizzed the group about each protection adjustment they went over the day before in a meeting.

When the team began scrimmaging, Bieniemy, with a walkie-talkie in his right hand, voiced the play calls from Reid to quarterback Patrick Mahomes through his helmet. Each play call was followed with Bieniemy quickly giving Mahomes encouragement or motivation. The phrase most used was "be aggressive."

Reid has relished watching Bieniemy in his new role. He appreciates how Bieniemy doesn't waste words.

"He's an unbelievable communicator, someone who can get his point across clearly and can take the complex and make it simple," Reid said. "He's teaching, and that's the important part. He's been great for everybody, from the quarterback all the way down through the offensive line."

Throughout an offseason full of changes to the roster — including the biggest, at quarterback — Bieniemy has challenged himself to understand the various personalities on offense. He wants his voice to have an impact, whether in film sessions, in position meetings or just one-on-one conversations during the few free moments available in camp.

He enters and leaves each practice asking himself one question: How can I help bring better unity?

"It's a great honor to have this opportunity," Bieniemy said last week. "Now I just want to make sure that we do a great job working together, but doing it the right way."

Perhaps what has mattered most to Bieniemy in his entire football career is his ceaseless pursuit to execute every objective in the correct manner. This is the biggest theme behind every intense lecture Bieniemy shares with the Chiefs. You don't need to relearn or do something twice if you pay attention to all the details the first time. The fastest way to improve and advance your career, Bieniemy says, is to treat each assignment with the care and respect it deserves and demands.

"Every play," he said, "is by far the most important."

Bieniemy, 48, understands the value of such an approach, which he knows has led him to one of the most coveted jobs in the NFL.

Entering this season, Bieniemy knew the statistic. Among the league's 32 teams, he, as an African-American, is the lone offensive coordinator who is a minority.

Many African-American assistants on offense, in the past decade, haven't been given the opportunity to become either a coordinator or a quarterbacks coach, the usual top two offense-related positions on a staff under the head coach. Along with data, the perception throughout the league is that minority coaches have a better chance of becoming a coordinator or head coach by being, or switching to, a defensive assistant.

From 2007 to 2017, just 13 of the 147 offensive-coordinator openings in the league went to African-Americans, according to The Denver Post. Hue Jackson, the coach of the Browns, accounted for three of the 13 hirings, as he was the coordinator for the Falcons, Raiders and Bengals.

Nine teams — the Chargers (George Stewart), Eagles (Duce Staley), Falcons (Raheem Morris), 49ers (Jon Embree), Jets (Mike Caldwell), Packers (Winston Moss), Seahawks (Clint Hurtt), Steelers (John Mitchell) and Texans (Romeo Crennel) — have minorities who are assistant or associate head coaches. Just three of the league's quarterbacks coaches are minorities: Marcus Brady with the Colts, David Culley with the Bills and Byron Leftwich, a former 10-year NFL quarterback, with the Cardinals.

"If you're not the quarterback coach or if you're not the coordinator calling plays, how do you get elevated to become a head coach?" Jackson said on ESPN radio in January 2016. "In order for you to have that opportunity, you have to be put in that position to have a chance to ascend."

In the same interview, Jackson said he felt some minority assistants are fearful when pursuing a coordinator position because of where their careers may go if they fail with such responsibilities. A second opportunity, Jackson said, may never be given.

With knowledge of the league's hiring record, Bieniemy wants to be a success, not only for the Chiefs but for other minority assistants who have the potential and knowledge to be high-quality coordinators and head coaches.

"I'm making sure I'm making the very most of it — studying, looking at tape, viewing (play) scripts," said Bieniemy, the second minority offensive coordinator in the Chiefs' history. "I'm asking questions to Coach (Reid). I'm trying to get as much information as I can milk out of him."

Bieniemy also knows his career path to becoming a coordinator was not conventional.

For nine NFL seasons, Bieniemy was a ferocious running back who lengthened his career by being smart and versatile out of the backfield. He began his coaching career in 2000 as an assistant at Thomas Jefferson High in Denver. He coached running backs in college for six years before joining the Vikings in 2006. With Adrian Peterson as the Vikings' star running back, Bieniemy helped him gain 5,782 rushing yards and score 52 touchdowns in four seasons.

In 2011, Bieniemy was hired by Jon Embree to be Colorado's offensive coordinator. Both men returned to their alma mater to help rebuild the school's program. In Bieniemy's first season, Colorado's offense ranked 92nd in the nation. The team went 4-20 in two years, which prompted the school to fire Embree and his staff.

Reid, when first building his staff after arriving in Kansas City, hired Bieniemy in 2013. Since then, the fiery Bieniemy has helped improve every featured running back for the Chiefs. Jamaal Charles led the league in touchdowns (19) in 2013 and averaged a franchise-best 5.5 yards per carry. Spencer Ware became a reliable player under Bieniemy in 2016, and Kareem Hunt, as a rookie, led the league in rushing last season.

"He pays attention to everything," Ware said of Bieniemy. "The biggest thing Coach Bieniemy will bring to our offense is his intensity. Take a look at his résumé or the players he's coached and the way they play football. Having the entire offense with that same mentality is pretty exciting."

For a man who loves talking, Bieniemy tried to be a better listener this summer after his promotion.

He called Embree. He spoke with Rip Scherer, the Chargers' tight-ends coach who was Colorado's quarterbacks coach from 2011-12. He chatted with Darrell Bevell, the former Seahawks offensive coordinator, and Tom Cable, the Raiders' offensive-line coach. Each man congratulated Bieniemy and offered advice.

"They've given me a lot," Bieniemy said, smiling. "Most of them said, 'Hey E.B., you can't work yourself to death. You've got to step back and take a couple deep breaths. Enjoy the process."

Embree made sure to tell Bieniemy that he was more than capable of succeeding.

"A lot of times, people think you have to be a quarterback to be an offensive coordinator, and that's not the case," Embree told The Kansas City Star in January. "I'm glad he's getting a chance to show that that doesn't necessarily have to be the case."

Eric Bieniemy says it's a privilege to work for and learn from Andy Reid, above. "A football genius," Bieniemy says. (Photo by Denny Medley-USA TODAY Sports)

Every assistant, at some point, needs a mentor, someone who will give them guidance and significant support.

One of first men who became a coaching mentor for Bieniemy was Reid. In 1999, Bieniemy played the final season of his career with the Eagles, who were led by Reid, then a first-year coach. The more the men worked together, the more Bieniemy was amazed by what he learned from the complexities of Reid's West Coast offense.

Reid felt Bieniemy could be a productive coach after his playing career, and both men were thrilled to be reunited in 2013 after building their relationship through the years. In January, when the Bears hired Matt Nagy, the Chiefs' former offensive coordinator, Reid promoted Bieniemy the next day.

"A football genius," Bieniemy said of Reid. "We just sit there and we talk about ball and all the different things that can present itself throughout the course of a week or a game. I couldn't ask for a better situation to be in."

Several people during camp — owner Clark Hunt, team president Mark Donovan and plenty of players — have noted that Reid has been energized by the newness of his team after so much roster change. Reid acknowledged his excitement and said Bieniemy was a large reason for it.

"He's my right-hand man," Reid said of Bieniemy. "He has a tremendous work ethic. You appreciate his energy every day. He's positive. I've got full confidence that he can take the offense and roll with it if I can't make it to something. He can take it and go."

For the past five years, Bieniemy observed how Reid treated his players, designed innovative plays and handled conflict in the locker room.

Bieniemy's latest experience, especially during camp, has been bringing his knowledge and perspective to the quarterback room. In the regular season, Reid, Bieniemy, Mahomes and Mike Kafka (the quarterbacks coach) will study and develop the weekly game plan. As a first-time starter, Mahomes has spent most of his time on the practice field standing next to Bieniemy when not taking his snaps.

"If I screw it up, my job is to have Patrick fix it," Bieniemy said. "When Patrick screws it up, it's my job is to help Patrick fix it. We're working in cahoots together."

Through mistakes and effective plays, Bieniemy has pushed Mahomes to complete all of his presnap reads and adjustments before using his aggressiveness and strong arm to push the ball down the field.

"It's been awesome," Mahomes said of learning from Bieniemy. "He's someone who is good with the protections, good with pretty much every nuance of the offense, of the little details, which is something I need to work on every single day. Having him and being able to ask him questions is something I've really tried to utilize as this camp has gone on."

In his 19 years as a head coach, Reid has produced 13 winning seasons. He has won with several quarterbacks, from Donovan McNabb to Michael Vick to Alex Smith. And with those victories, Reid has worked with coordinators who have become head coaches. Brad Childress, Doug Pederson and Nagy were all hired to lead teams after working next to Reid.

Dave Toub, the Chiefs' assistant head coach and special-teams coordinator, said Bieniemy has the respect of players and the leadership traits to potentially be the next offensive assistant under Reid whom owners consider hiring for a head-coaching job.

"Eric has certainly paid his dues, and he's definitely deserving of this position," Toub said. "It's like getting a PhD. It puts him in a spotlight, which is great."

The Chiefs' offense this season could be explosive. The team is confident in Mahomes' playmaking ability, Kareem Hunt and Ware could be a strong duo, and receivers Travis Kelce, Sammy Watkins and Hill are all Pro Bowl-worthy players. The offensive line features several veterans, too.

Bieniemy is aware of what might be possible, both for the team and his career, if the Chiefs become legitimate Super Bowl contenders. But Bieniemy didn't allow himself to think of the future too much. His next task after a recent practice needed to be handled with the proper amount of attention.

"The only thing I want to do," he said, "is correct this tape, make sure we get the corrections right and move forward."

(Brett Veach)

The Chiefs' facelift is all Brett Veach ... with Andy Reid's blessing, of course

Vahe Gregorian

Kansas City Star

August 16, 2018

ST. JOSEPH

If anything was clear about the state of the Chiefs after last season, it was that they had plateaued under coach Andy Reid.

In five seasons, Reid had gone 53-27 in the regular season to restore dignity, competitiveness and hope to the franchise in turmoil when he took over after the 2-14 fiasco in 2012. Sterling work, in fact.

But with another playoff cave-in, this time a 22-21 loss to Tennessee sprinkled with bizarre officiating but most notable for a botched 21-3 lead, the Chiefs fell to 1-4 in the postseason under the former Philadelphia Eagles head coach.

With exasperation seeping into expectations, the Chiefs suddenly were at a different sort of crossroads.

Meanwhile, if anything was unclear about the willingness and ability of not-yet-40 general manager Brett Veach to engage meaningful changes in his first year on the job, that's been answered emphatically in the months since.

Forty of the 90 men on the preseason roster were acquired in the offseason. Average age: 25.2.

And that only starts to tell the story of their facelift.

"You look at the roster, and you go, 'He's putting his stamp on it now,' " Reid said.

With the boldness of someone Reid jokes still "looks like he's about 14" but judgment and diligence that he figures is well beyond his years.

"He's relentless ... (and) that energy isn't coming out of a can or something," Reid said. "That's real, and he is that way 24-7. He goes and goes and goes."

So does the trust between them, built on a long-term, day-in, day-out relationship since Reid hired Veach in Philadelphia. And it's imperative in the Chiefs' operation.

While Reid and former GM John Dorsey had known each other for years, spoke of wanting to work together and collaborated on the formula for the turnaround here, it's hard to believe Dorsey would have been fired in mid-2017 if Reid had objected to it.

But despite some superficial initial skepticism about the reason Veach was hired, it's also significant that Reid didn't want him in place as a mere "yes man."

He knows Veach has a special eye for talent, including being a major voice advocating for Patrick Mahomes in his previous job as co-director of player personnel, but also the disposition to be his own man.

"If he puts you in that position, it's because he believes in you," Veach said. "And believing in somebody doesn't mean, 'I want to cross-check every single thing.'

"It means, 'I believe in you, and you go do it.' And I think that motivates me more than anything."

So Veach was motivated to engineer a major makeover of a vulnerable defense — on which Veach deployed his first five draft picks — and to make key changes on offense.

Gone in the process are aging mainstays Derrick Johnson and Tamba Hali, volatile cornerback Marcus Peters and underappreciated quarterback Alex Smith.

In one swoop that signaled Veach had the makings of something special in him, the trade of Smith cleared the way for the Patrick Mahomes era to begin in earnest. It also brought in cornerback Kendall Fuller and a draft pick and freed up some funds for an offseason that featured the signings of receiver Sammy Watkins, linebacker Anthony Hitchens and defensive tackle Xavier Williams.

Part of the Chiefs' massive turnover, which can't be officially quantified until the cut-down to a 53-man roster on Sept. 1, also was about a change in culture — a term that everyone from Veach to owner Clark Hunt has mentioned in the last few weeks.

No one has spoken out in that context about Peters, who was traded to the Rams after a season of observable on-field tirades, squabbles with coaches and aversion to tackling.

Publicly, the Chiefs have remained vague about why they dealt him away, though Veach in March called it "a football decision" that had nothing to do with Peters not standing for the national anthem or some assumed mandate from Hunt.

What has been stressed instead is who has been added.

Culture and character are "something that's very important to Brett Veach, and as he brought in players both in free agency and in the draft, he wanted to make sure that each of those players was going to be a positive contributor in terms of the character of the football team," Hunt said.

Or as Veach put the job of shaping the team: "We're going to infuse some youth in this roster, and we need guys who can fly around and play hard. And within those specific skills we're looking for, also look for guys who are grown men who do things the right way."

On one side of the ball, the effect will be a replenished defense likely featuring more than half its starting lineup changed.

Whether that makes for winning football, particularly in the postseason, remains to be seen: Another wobbly defensive season could indicate that a change is, and was, needed as much or more at defensive coordinator than in personnel. Coordinator Bob Sutton is still in charge of the defense.

But at least theoretically, a group anchored in the middle by another Veach acquisition from last year, linebacker Reggie Ragland, figures to be stronger against its past nemesis, the run.

On the other side, depending on the pace of Mahomes' development, an offense that was among the most prolific in the NFL last year could be even more potent with Watkins as an added dimension beyond Tyreek Hill, Travis Kelce and Kareem Hunt.

"If you are an offensive coordinator with the mind that (Reid) has and the creativity that he likes to bring to this game — that gets you excited," Chiefs president Mark Donovan said. "And that goes back to Brett and what he has done and how they work together."

In the most practical sense, how they work together goes something like this: After they have what Veach calls "kind of a generic blueprinting dialogue," Reid expects Veach and his staff to go "crank tape and crunch numbers and come up with ideas."

The potential solutions don't come from "trying to reinvent the wheel, or pull out some formula that no one knows about," Veach said.

They stem from obsessive homework that includes keen attention to the sort of salary-cap ramifications that plagued Dorsey. By the time something is brought to Reid, he will know the case has been fully exhausted and vetted and more often than not will say, "Let's do it."

"That's what makes him special," Veach said. "He's not a guy who's a control freak."

Veach is mindful of the meaning of that approach himself, saying his trust in others is as significant as his own instincts.

"I know that I'm able to bring a lot to the table," he said. "But at the same time, I know that when I come to the table I don't have every answer to every problem that we have.

"So you surround yourself with really good people, and you're going to go in there and talk about things. I bring my knowledge and my energy to the table, but at the same time I defer to the people around who have other solutions to some problems that we're having.

"Then we kind of just work things out together."

Just over a year into the job now, Veach knows he still is growing into it in some ways and figures there are "probably still some scenarios I haven't encountered yet."

But he also knows he had excellent grounding from Dorsey and Reid, a former GM himself, each of whom allowed him strong input in the past and exposed him to so much to prepare him for this.

So there's been no hesitance to put his stamp on the team and aggressively try to jolt the Chiefs through the ceiling they've hit.

However it plays out, that's what this franchise needed rather than basically staying status quo and just hoping for better days ahead.

Carol Briggs placed her newborn son on the bed and removed all of his clothes. She tried to find herself in his face, searching his mouth, his nose, his eyes. "Not yet," she thought. She saw only his father. She looked him up and down, making a mental note of each of his 10 tiny toes, chubby legs, puffy belly and two little arms reaching up at her. "In my mind," Briggs says, "that was probably going to be the last time I ever saw him."

It was Dec. 1, 1972, and a big snowstorm had hit the greater Pittsburgh area that week. Briggs had gone sledding with some of the other girls the night before, dragging a cardboard box up and down a big hill that emptied out right at the Zoar Home for Mothers, Babies and Convalescents in Allison Park, Pennsylvania. She woke up in labor around 2 a.m., and just 32 minutes later, she was a mother. She named her baby Jon Kenneth Briggs.

Her parents and older brother drove the hour from her hometown of Youngstown, Ohio, to be with her at the hospital. After cleaning out her room at the maternity home and signing some papers, she was back in Ohio the next day, ready to resume her life as a 16-year-old high schooler and National Honor Society member.

No one outside of her immediate family and her cousin Robin knew about the baby. Only when she was preparing to sign the adoption papers did Briggs consider sharing the news with the father, a teenage fling who had gone off to college before she discovered she was pregnant. She ultimately decided against it.

"He was a kid too," she says. "He was off at college on a scholarship. I think I may have felt that I kind of got myself in this, I'm gonna do what I need to do to work my way through it."

With her parents' blessing, Briggs had decided that when the child was born, she would put him up for adoption.

"My mother was still cleaning up my room for me once a week," she says. "I wasn't in a position to be anybody's mother. I thought this was best for him, that I allow him to be placed with some family that would be able to give him all the great things that I had coming up because I had a mother and a father. I just didn't want him to get cheated out of anything."

In her last interaction with the adoption agency, Briggs was told that baby Jon had been placed with a doctor and his wife in Columbus, Ohio.

In early 2017, now-Kansas City Chiefs running backs coach Deland McCullough signed on to coach the running backs at USC, having spent the previous six years in the same position at Indiana University. A few months before making the move to southern California, he and his wife, Darnell, welcomed their fourth son into the world. For the fourth time, the couple provided doctors with Darnell's medical history but couldn't do the same for Deland's side of the family. At 44 years old, McCullough knew nothing about where he came from.

Growing up in Youngstown, his adoptive mother, Adelle Comer, could tell him only that he was adopted at a very young age and that she had no information about his birth parents. For a long time, that was enough. McCullough wasn't interested in finding them anyway. There was enough trouble in Youngstown those days, and he didn't want to burden anyone who might have bigger things to worry about.

Things changed when he had his first child, and as his family grew, so too did his desire to know of his past. He wanted to know who gave him his deep voice and his muscular build and to whom he owed his pensive nature and quiet intensity. He wondered where son Dason got his height and which grandfather or uncle his bespectacled son, Daeh, might favor. He was so hungry for information that he never questioned whether the search might lead him to answers he couldn't handle.

"I didn't know what was going to happen," McCullough says. "I didn't know how people would receive things one way or another. I didn't have a plan. I just knew I wanted to find out."

New laws in Ohio and Pennsylvania had called for the unsealing of adoption records, giving McCullough new hope that he might find his birth parents. In November 2017, more than a year after filling out the requisite paperwork and years after his search began, he finally received his adoption files in the mail. For the first time, he saw his original birth certificate, complete with his name, Jon Kenneth Briggs, and the name of his mother, Carol Denise Briggs.

There was no information about his father.

Adelle Comer was living in a three-bedroom house on a cul-de-sac in Youngstown with her husband, popular local radio host A.C. McCullough, and their young son, Damon, when she got the call. It was a social worker reaching out to see whether she and A.C. would come see an infant at an adoption agency in Pennsylvania. Not long after the tragic death of their second son, Alex, who died of an intestinal birth defect after just 28 days, the young couple had started serving as foster parents, and they were looking to adopt. In January 1973, they met 6-week-old baby Jon.

"He was asleep in a bassinet," Comer says. "And she put him in my arms, and when he woke up, his eyes were looking straight at me. It was instant connection. Love. Mother-son."

By March of that year, Jon Kenneth Briggs had been renamed Deland Scott McCullough, and he was living at home with his new parents, Adelle and A.C.

"We were still in love, a good couple," Comer says. "We went to church, partied, went to cookouts. We were working together and doing this together and wanting to make a home for our children. We knew that God's hand was in it. Deland came so fast to us. We knew that it was meant to be. Both of us."

But things changed quickly. Comer's father had a stroke, and though A.C. wanted to put him in a nursing home, Comer brought her dad to live with the family in Youngstown. Their marriage deteriorated, and when Deland was just 2 years old, A.C. moved out.

"They went through a lot of hurt and disappointment, but they took it," Comer says of her sons. "I said, 'God gives you an example of what to be and what not to be. You have to make the choice.' And that's all I had to say, and they got it."

When Deland was in elementary school, Comer came home to find that he had cut three gashes into the couch for which she had just finished two years of layaway payments. Kids at school had been teasing him about being adopted, and he accused Comer of loving him less than her birth son, Damon. She explained that she loved the two boys differently, one because he had been in her belly and the other because she had chosen him. After that, Deland McCullough rarely spoke of his adoption. He got good at pretending to be whole.

"The void was there," he says. "I wish that it wasn't, but I think I did a good job of hiding it."

After the divorce, Comer had relationships with a few other men, some of whom were combative and abusive. "Some men don't understand what respect is," she says. "I've got two sons, and I'm not gonna allow my children to grow up with this type of lifestyle, this drama."

Damon sometimes tried to physically defend her, but then he left for college, and Deland felt too small, physically and emotionally, to step in. His response to the violence was to try to tune it out, become emotionless, put blinders on and dream of a way out of the house and out of Youngstown.

Comer acknowledges that she contributed to the chaos in her own way as well.

"Biggest drama queen in the world, OK?" she says. "They called me Ma Barker because I'd shoot you and ask questions later."

Comer took Deland with her to therapy for a while, hoping to make things at home a little less turbulent. New boyfriends came and went, but she mostly settled into life as a single mom, taking on multiple jobs to support her sons, including as a switchboard operator at the Cuyahoga County Department of Human Services, a waitress, a social worker and a short-order cook at the local bowling alley. She did her best to rear the boys on her own, but they moved a lot, and she struggled to pay the bills, sometimes having to choose between electricity and a working phone.

But Comer stressed the importance of an education, insisting that she see the boys' homework to make sure they were taking it seriously. She taught them the value of a dollar and the importance of faith, demanding that they use a portion of their monthly child support for Sunday school and tithes at church. And she was always shuttling them to activities, from the theater program at the Youngstown Playhouse to football, basketball and track practices.

Deland was a bit of a late bloomer in terms of talent, but the passion for football was always there. Early on in pee wee, he heard his name over the loudspeaker and a light went off in his head. He fell in love with the game and started carrying a football with him everywhere he went, even to bed.

"It was an escape," he says. "When I was out there practicing, you didn't think about the electric is off, you know? You didn't even think about anything like that. You were just out there balling, doing your thing and competing and bonding with your friends."

Comer was a one-woman cheer squad, bringing multiple signs to Deland's games and running up and down the sideline rooting him on. One night when her ride didn't show up, she took her son's moped to the game. He looked up in the stands and saw her, still wearing his moped helmet, hollering and screaming for him: "D-MACK! D-MACK!"

As a junior defensive back, Deland saw himself playing football at a small school or enlisting in the Navy, but an opportunity to show his talent at the running back position his senior year drew the eye of college recruiters. Suddenly, he was being pursued by the likes of Jim Tressel, then the head coach at Youngstown State; Bob Stoops, then the defensive backs coach at Kansas State; and Sherman Smith, then the running backs coach at Miami of Ohio.

Deland McCullough looked out the window of his third-period English class at Campbell Memorial High School and saw a tall man emerge from a candy apple red Mercedes-Benz with tan interior and tricked-out gold rims. A few minutes later, he got a pink slip message to leave class and go to the office, where the tall man stuck out his hand and said, with a firm handshake, "I'm Sherman Smith, the running backs coach at Miami University." A former star quarterback at Miami, Smith was a second-round draft pick at running back for the Seahawks and went on to play eight years in the NFL. He had a booming voice, thick arms and broad, square shoulders. He walked and talked and carried himself like a former pro; McCullough was immediately drawn to him.

"It was just something about his personality," McCullough says. "The way he presented himself. He had things that I hadn't seen out of a man or mentor. He was on top of his details. He was successful. He had played in the NFL. He got his degree. I wasn't around that type of person.

"The Mercedes was nice, too, you know?" he laughed. "That was slick."

As a Youngstown native himself, Smith thought guys from the area were tough, but the coaches told him McCullough was special -- a thin kid, but when he couldn't run around people, he'd go through them. McCullough was serious that day in the office, offering few smiles and answering with a lot of "Yes, sir" and "No, sir," but he was also intelligent and expressive. Smith thought he'd very much like to work with him.

The feeling was mutual. Despite interest from other schools, the decision to attend Miami University was easy for McCullough, especially after the home visit, during which Smith charmed Comer as well.

"Well, Coach Smith was hard not to love," Comer says, laughing. "I fell in love with him the first time. He was just a gentleman. And he was very attentive and respectful to me."

Smith drove them to visit the school and was back at Campbell Memorial a few months later for signing day, when McCullough signed his letter of intent to play at Miami. When McCullough arrived on campus, the coaches tried to turn him into a wide receiver, but he pushed for an opportunity to work with Smith and the running backs, accepting a redshirt freshman year to pursue the position he believed he was meant to play.

"I would tell the players, 'You may not be looking for a father, but I'm going to treat you like you're my sons," Smith says. "And so I just looked at every guy like my son. I just wanted to be a positive role model for Deland and exemplify what I thought my father exemplified for me."

"He was everything," McCullough says. "If anything was going on, I was going to talk to Coach Smith. Everybody in that room gravitated towards Coach Smith just because that's the type of person he was. What he's about rubs off on you, so I always wanted to be around that."

Smith left Miami University after that season to be the tight ends coach at the University of Illinois, but he and McCullough stayed in touch. He watched from afar as McCullough put together a Hall of Fame career in Oxford, rushing 36 touchdowns and setting a school record with 4,368 rushing yards. McCullough was surprised when his name wasn't called in the 1996 draft, but he was invited to a few workouts and ended up signing with the Bengals. He was leading the NFL in preseason rushing before he suffered a season-ending knee injury in Cincinnati's final exhibition game. After a few more looks in the NFL, a couple of seasons in Canada, several more knee surgeries and a brief flirtation with the XFL, McCullough finally accepted in 2001 that the dream of pro football was over.

A few years later, married and the father of one son, McCullough took a job teaching communications and coaching football at Harmony Community School in Cincinnati. Despite rising to the ranks of principal and making a good salary, his first taste of coaching gave him the itch to coach full time, and he reached out to his alma mater about an opportunity to join the staff.

Smith had followed a similar path, first teaching and coaching high schoolers, then working his way up the ranks from Miami University to the University of Illinois, the Houston Oilers, the Washington Redskins and, finally, the running backs coach for the Seahawks. He was with Seattle when he got a call from McCullough, asking for advice as he started his new job at Miami University.

By 2014, McCullough was coaching at Indiana University, and the two were reunited on the field, as Smith welcomed McCullough to Seattle for a coaching internship. He saw firsthand that his former player had a real future on the sideline. He had no idea that off the field, McCullough was consumed by the search for his family.

A few days before Thanksgiving 2017, Carol Briggs got home from work, sat down on the couch and opened a Facebook message from an unfamiliar man: "Did you have a baby in 1972 in Allegheny County that you placed for adoption?"

"Luckily, I was already sitting," she says.

Briggs had thought often of baby Jon. Every year, she wished him a "Happy Birthday" on her Facebook wall, and she regularly searched adoption websites to see if he might be looking for her. Briggs could still hear her mother's voice, saying more and more often in the years before she died, "You need to find that boy." Never married and without any other children, Briggs would joke to her cousin Robin that one day baby Jon might show up at her door and walk in to find her home alone, dancing around the house to Funkadelic.

She called her older brother, who warned her that the message might be from someone trying to bribe or extort her. She responded anyway, and after a few short messages, she agreed to speak to McCullough on the phone that night after he got out of practice. In the hours before the call, she Googled his name and read every article she could find. She stared at his pictures and tried to find herself in his face. It wasn't hard to see it now: the mouth, the nose, the eyes.

McCullough called Briggs from a hallway at USC as he awaited the start of a football family dinner.

They spoke as if they'd known each other for years, an easy back and forth as they shared where life had taken them in the 44 years since she'd laid him down on that bed and let him go. She learned that he had never gone to live with a doctor in Columbus, that in fact they had been just a few miles away from each other in Youngstown for all of McCullough's childhood. She likely shopped at the same grocery store as Adelle Comer, perhaps even passing young McCullough in the aisles. She was certain that her sports-fanatic father, now deceased, had read about McCullough's high school exploits in the paper.

McCullough was overjoyed to find his birth mother, though a mother had never been what he was missing.

"Within probably the first five or six minutes, he says, 'Who is my father?'" Briggs says.

She took a breath. She had probably told only three people the man's name. After making the decision to not tell the father all those years ago, she had been determined to never let him learn of the baby years later because of careless gossip.

She hesitated but decided McCullough had a right to know.

"Your father's name is Sherman Smith," Briggs told him.

McCullough, leaning against a wall in the hallway, felt as though he might pass out.

He started flashing back to all of his memories with Smith and all the times people had joked about him being a carbon copy of his coach. Throughout college, when he returned to coach at Miami University, during his internship with the Seahawks.

"'Man, you and Coach Smith look alike.' 'Man, you all walk alike.' 'Y'all this, y'all this," McCullough says. "There's no reason to connect those dots because you weren't even thinking about them. A sense of pride that went through me, like, 'Wow, that explains these things.' And then I also start thinking about all the similarities of our path. That just blew me away."

Not only had he known his father for 28 years, but Smith was also his mentor, the man he had looked up to since he was 16 years old. McCullough thought of a photo of him and Smith at Campbell Memorial High, both beaming as he signed his letter of intent to play at Miami University. The same photo he had pinned to the corkboard that hung in his college dorm room. The same photo that was at that moment sitting in a Ziploc bag in the drawer of his nightside table, a bag that had traveled with him through every job and every move.

"If you would have told me to pick who my father was, there's no way I would have picked him because I might have thought I wasn't worthy for him to be my father," McCullough says. "I felt like my blessings came full circle because I'd always wanted to be somebody like him."

"I could hear him take a big breath," Briggs says. "And I could kind of hear him choke up a little. And finally he says, 'Well, I've known Sherman my whole life.'"

The next morning, McCullough texted Smith asking if they could talk about something important. It was November, and Smith assumed that McCullough had gotten a coaching opportunity he wanted to discuss. Instead, McCullough began by talking about his search for his birth parents, how he had found his biological mother, and she was from Youngstown, just like them.

"Praise the Lord!" Smith recalls saying. "What a blessing!"

"And then he said, 'I asked her who my biological father was, and she said you."

Smith was quiet. Sixty-three years old, he had been married to his college sweetheart for 42 years and had reared a grown son and a daughter. He hadn't heard the name Carol Briggs in more than four decades. He never knew she was pregnant, never knew there was a baby. He knew he couldn't deny the possibility that he was McCullough's father, but he wanted proof. Even more, he wanted time to think. He asked McCullough if he could call him back later. Stunned and a little hurt, McCullough agreed.

Smith sat in his office. Guilt washed over him. Even though he hadn't been told about the baby, he couldn't shake the feeling that he had let Briggs and McCullough down. He felt awful that he had left Briggs in such a difficult position and regretted all the years he had missed out on being a father to McCullough. He had built a life making a difference in young men's lives. He had spoken to his athletes and his kids about being responsible, being accountable.

"Being irresponsible is not neutral," Smith says. "When you're irresponsible, someone becomes responsible for what you've been irresponsible for."

He thought about what this would say about him as a man and found himself hoping that a paternity test would show that he wasn't McCullough's father. It was a thought that brought him only more guilt.

He asked to speak to Briggs.

Briggs cried her way through work the day she was set to talk to Smith. "I hadn't talked to Sherman in 45 years. And after 45 years, this is probably not the icebreaker conversation that you want to have with the guy that you used to fool around with. 'Hey, we've got a 45-year-old son. And how are you?' So, no, I wasn't looking forward to that at all. Not at all."

There was no need to worry. Smith was calm and kind, and the two settled into a nice conversation, catching up for a long time before they even got to talking about McCullough. Smith apologized to her for her having to make such a difficult decision at such a young age, and Briggs explained why she had felt it was best to not tell Smith about the baby. She said that over the years, she just wanted to know that McCullough was OK, and Smith reassured her that her son was a good man.

Briggs hung up full of emotion but relieved that Smith wasn't angry with her. Smith hung up feeling much more certain that McCullough was his son.

Smith talked to his wife, Sharon, and his brother, Vincent. He talked to his children, Sherman and Shavonne. He thought about McCullough's coaching internship a few years earlier, how Seahawks assistant offensive line coach Pat Ruel hadn't stopped cracking jokes about Smith and his protege acting like a father-son duo.

McCullough sent Smith an old article from his days in the CFL, and Smith couldn't believe his eyes. "I'm looking at this thing and thinking, 'I don't remember taking this picture. I don't remember doing this article," Smith says. "I'm looking at Deland, and I'm thinking it's me. That got me.

"I called my aunt in Youngstown, and I told her about it. And she'd went on YouTube and pulled up some pictures of Deland, and she called me back. She said, 'Nephew, I can save you the money on the DNA tests.'"

The more Smith thought about it, the more he realized the story wasn't about him and his guilt. It was about McCullough and what he had been through. It was about a life without a father, about the years McCullough had spent looking for his birth parents, hoping to fill a void, wanting to know where he'd come from.

"It was said that humility is not thinking less of yourself, it's thinking of yourself less," Smith says. "I started thinking about Deland."

Sometime in the weeks between that first phone call and the test results, Smith realized that he was hoping he was McCullough's father. That, in fact, he would be devastated if the results came back otherwise. When the test came in, it showed a 99.99 percent chance that Smith was, indeed, McCullough's father. Both were elated.

"I look at it, and I just say it's a God thing," Smith says. "It's grace. It's undeserved. And that's what's made it great for Deland and for all of us, how everyone has embraced this and is excited about our new family."

McCullough understood why Smith had been so curt at first. McCullough had spent his whole life wondering about his birth parents. Briggs had spent her whole life wondering about her child. Smith had gone from zero to a 45-year-old son in one phone call; he needed time.

A few weeks after the paternity test came back, McCullough had a recruiting trip near Nashville, where Smith and his wife had relocated after his retirement. McCullough made a special trip to see the man he now knew as his father.

"I'm pretty sure he was nervous," Smith says of that day. "I laugh because I'm looking out the window because I know he's supposed to be coming. I'm standing there, and I see he parks at the corner down there. And he's parked there for five minutes. I said, 'What's he doing?' He finally pulls up and gets out the car."

As McCullough walked up the steps to the house, Smith greeted him with open arms and said, "My son." It was the first time in McCullough's life that anyone had called him that.

"For so many years that I was around him, the embrace was, 'Hey, Coach, how you doing?'" Smith says. "But this is, 'Man, my son.' Maybe I was doing it for me, to help me really, fully understand."

"I know he was saying it from a place of 'I'm proud. This is my son," McCullough says. "I'd never heard that. I'd never been referred to like that before -- period. It really hit me hard emotionally. When I sit here at this point, and I'm looking at the things that I've done, I'm happy that I'm able to be somebody that he's proud of."

At first, McCullough was concerned that his adoptive mother might be upset by his relationships with his birth parents. But as soon as he heard that Briggs and Comer had hit it off in their first phone call, he knew everything would be fine.

"All I can say is, 'Are you serious?' Over and over again. 'Are you serious?'" Comer says of McCullough's journey leading to Smith. "It's just a miracle that his birth father's been in his life since he was 16, 17 years old. That's my son, and I want nothing but 100 percent best for him. He needed that, and God gave it to him, and it's in God's time."

Both Smith and Briggs are endlessly grateful to Comer for raising McCullough with the wisdom they didn't yet have.

"She did what I couldn't do," Briggs says of Comer. "She was an adult, she was married at the time, so you know she brought him into a family structure. That was what I wanted for him. I wanted him to have what I had, and she gave him that. She gave him all the tools that he needed in growing up to be the successful man that he is right now."

"Now I know who I am and where I'm from," Deland McCullough says of finding his biological parents, Sherman Smith and Carol Briggs.

This past June, the two Miami University Hall of Famers, Smith and McCullough, were back on campus to witness the verbal commitment of McCullough's son, Deland McCullough II, to the RedHawks football team. The younger McCullough is a defensive back, just like Smith's son, Sherman, who played the position at Miami as well.

In July, a huge family reunion in Youngstown brought McCullough, Briggs, Smith and Comer together for the first time. All of McCullough's parents in one place, reflecting on nurture versus nature, what is inherited versus what is taught and the many different forms of parenthood. It was both the culmination of a journey and the start of something new for the families that the journey had introduced. A man found his parents, a mother found her child, and a father discovered a son he never knew he was missing. There is no jealousy, no resentment and no regret. There is just gratitude for the winding paths that brought them all together.

"When I look at Deland, the type of guy he is, it was a gift to us," Smith says. "And to think -- Deland felt we were a gift to him."

"Now I know who I am and where I'm from," McCullough says. "I got all of the pieces to the story. I got them all now."

How the Chiefs finally found their franchise quarterback in Patrick Mahomes

Terez Paylor

Yahoo Sports

September 21, 2018

A few days before the NFLPA Collegiate Bowl in January 2017, Chris Cabott and Brett Veach huddled in a quiet hallway outside of a Los Angeles hotel ballroom.

The discussion they'd have that day — about a quarterback prospect out of Texas Tech named Patrick Mahomes II — would shape the direction of the Kansas City Chiefs for years to come, though no one would have guessed that at the time.

Cabott, who co-represented Mahomes with Leigh Steinberg, was trying to convince NFL teams and draft pundits that Mahomes was more than a reckless gunslinger, someone who should be a first-round pick in the coming months. This was long before Mahomes became one of the hottest quarterbacks in the NFL entering Sunday, sporting a 143.3 rating with 10 touchdown passes, 582 passing yards and zero interceptions after two games.

Veach, the Chiefs' co-director of player personnel, was a mere lieutenant for general manager John Dorsey. But he had long earned the trust of head coach Andy Reid, who was given the same power as Dorsey within the Chiefs' organization, and held significant sway. And that mattered because Reid never forgot Veach's strong — and endearingly overbearing, he'd tell you — recommendations to draft DeSean Jackson, Fletcher Cox and LeSean McCoy, way back when Reid was the head coach of the Philadelphia Eagles and Veach was a scout there.

So as Cox, Jackson and McCoy all blossomed into Pro Bowlers in Philly, Reid came to value Veach's opinion more and more. And Veach, who was eager for his next score after following Reid to Kansas City in 2013, was convinced he'd found his next gem in Mahomes. He grew infatuated with the strong-armed Texan over the previous 12 months, when the Chiefs were tasked with finding a gifted young quarterback to develop behind incumbent starter, Alex Smith.

So when Veach bumped into Cabott that day, he had an agenda. He wanted to start a running dialogue about Mahomes with Cabott, another ambitious, fast-talking East Coaster in his late 30s. The two bonded easily over big dreams and a love of football, which was a prime reason Veach wasn't too worried about showing his cards, even though another agent might have used his interest in Mahomes as a means to drum up more curiosity from other teams.

"Oh yeah, you've got Mahomes," Veach said, prompting Cabott to answer in the affirmative. "We're really serious about Patrick."

Veach did not know that the latter sentence was music to Cabott's ears. Everyone loved Mahomes' gun, gusto and improvisational ability, but prognosticators still had him pegged as a second- to third-round pick, largely due to his raw footwork and the fact that an air raid quarterback had never made it big in the NFL.

But now, finally, someone else believed.

Cabott grinned.

"Good — and I'm serious about him, too," Cabott said. "I think he's special, a once-in-a-decade type talent."

"Agreed," Veach said.

Rallying the troops around Mahomes

At that very moment, the two reveled in their shared understanding, and began talking candidly about the rifle-armed kid they both believed would be a star, and how he'd be a perfect fit for the Chiefs.

So if you want to know the Mahomes origins story involving the Chiefs, this is as good a place to start as any. Over the next three months after that meeting in L.A., Cabott says that without fail, he'd hear from Veach, who always wanted to know the latest on his guy.

"For like 94 straight days, we literally communicated in some way, shape or form," Cabott told Yahoo Sports. "We established a rapport where Brett was like, 'anything about Patrick, I want to know."

Cabott respected Veach's aggression and persistence. He wanted to know how Mahomes did in workouts. He wanted to know how his injured wrist was healing. He wanted to know the details of Mahomes' passing script for his pro day workout at Texas Tech.

"Some of these calls with Brett were at midnight, 1 a.m. in the morning," Cabott recalled with a chuckle. "It was clear to me that Patrick was the guy in Brett's eyes, the guy that he wanted them to take. But it would be more than his call."

Indeed. But Veach was on that, too, as he was the first one to introduce Mahomes to Reid, the quarterback guru with a tremendous amount of organizational sway.

For months, Veach hounded Reid, telling him: check out Mahomes, check out Mahomes, check out Mahomes.

Reid did, and grew to love him, too, for all the reasons Veach did.

Dorsey held his cards much closer to the vest than Veach did, but Cabott could tell he was into Mahomes, too, given the way Dorsey acted at the Senior Bowl – another college all-star game that the NFL descends upon for scouting purposes — which was held a few weeks after his meeting with Veach at the NFLPA Collegiate Bowl.

"Hey, I want to talk to you about our guys," Cabott remembers saying when they bumped into each other.

"OK, who do you got?" Dorsey asked, somewhat mischievously. "Oh, I know who you got."

Turns out Dorsey — who Cabott remembers winking and walking away — was as easy for Veach to sell on Mahomes as Reid was. Prior to joining the Chiefs, Dorsey put in 20-plus years with the Green Bay Packers as a scout and front-office executive. The bulk of his time there was spent with Hall of Famer Brett Favre, and Dorsey grew to revere Favre's combination of toughness, arm strength and ability to make impossible throws. Privately, he began telling folks that Mahomes had a little Favre in him.

With the two men at the top of the Chiefs' organizational football chain on board with Mahomes — and area scout Willie Davis' background work on Mahomes coming out clean — the decision was made to place Mahomes atop their quarterback board for the 2017 NFL draft. That put him above Clemson's Deshaun Watson and North Carolina's Mitchell Trubisky, both of whom were viewed internally as having late first-round value.

That means the Chiefs, who tagged Mahomes as a top-10 selection, would not have given up the same capital to move up for either player that they would eventually use to snag Mahomes, a notion backed up by the fact that Veach skipped Watson's and Trubisky's pro days, but didn't miss Mahomes'.

"Brett said in a recent interview that if the Chiefs had the first overall pick, they would have taken Patrick – and I believe him," Cabott said. "Brett was pretty sincere and genuine in his interest the whole time."

NFL draft night: The QB sneak

To get Mahomes, Dorsey, the man in charge of actually working the phones, had to get creative. The Chiefs were selecting at No. 27, and thanks to the league-wide connections of Reid, Dorsey and Veach, they knew a handful of other teams were just as interested in Mahomes as they were. The New Orleans Saints, picking at No. 11, brought Mahomes in for a pre-draft visit. The Cleveland Browns (at No. 12) and the Arizona Cardinals (at No. 13) worked him out. The Houston Texanswere picking 25th and sniffed around about a trade-up for him.

Cabott and Steinberg were careful to never reveal the Chiefs' intense interest in Mahomes, lest they screw up the chance for their player to land in what they deemed an ideal situation, with a quarterback guru in Reid, stable ownership in the Hunt family and a plethora of offensive skill players.

"They seemed pretty laser-focused on Patrick," Steinberg said. "We were more than happy to encourage their interest, and we kept their confidence and never said a word publicly about it because had we said anything, it would have put them in a compromised position to make a trade. If other teams knew they really, really wanted Patrick, they would make a trade difficult."

So Cabott and Steinberg kept their secret, and by the time the first night of the draft rolled around, the Chiefs had already signaled to both of them that they intended to move up and select Mahomes. Veach did it in an amusing way, by texting Cabott an image of a Texas Tech Red Raiders logo along with the words "good luck."

And when pick No. 9 rolled around, and Veach sent Cabott the same image again, Cabott grew excited.

"Does this mean what I think it does," Cabott wrote back.

"Yup," Veach replied.

"When," Cabott asked.

"Now," Veach wrote.

And sure enough, the Chiefs traded two first-round picks and a third-rounder to Buffalo for the right to move up from No. 27 to No. 10 and snag Mahomes. Kansas City, a town that had not seen its Chiefs select a first-round quarterback since 1983, rejoiced.

So did Reid and Dorsey, for that matter. While Reid finally had a premium young quarterback to develop, Dorsey — who was about two months away from being replaced by Veach as the Chiefs' general manager after four seasons — had outmaneuvered at least four teams (New Orleans, Cleveland, Houston and Arizona) that he believed would take Mahomes. And he hadn't panicked by moving up further, as others might have done after the Chicago Bears shocked everyone by trading up a spot to snag Trubisky at No. 2.

But no one was happier about the move than Veach and Cabott, the two men whose initial conversation in January — as two of the only true believers on the initial Mahomes bandwagon — spurred hours and hours of talk and texts about how good of a fit he'd be in Kansas City.

"I about jumped out of my skin and started yelling — we got it done! We got it done!" Cabott said with a laugh, when asked to recall draft day.

The next thing Cabott remembers doing on draft night reveals how clear the Chiefs were about their interest in Mahomes as their No. 1 guy. After Cabott and Steinberg got word of the trade, someone at Mahomes' draft-day party fetched a Chiefs hat from behind a nearby banner and slipped it to Mahomes so he could put it on quickly for the cameras that were stationed to watch the ensuing celebration.

Shortly after the NFL Network broadcast went live, Mahomes was shown grinning widely, with a bright red Chiefs hat on his head. Cabott was caught smiling next to Steinberg, only a few feet away, while Veach beamed on his own in the Chiefs' war room alongside Dorsey and Reid.

For months, this was what they all had wanted. And now, finally, it was a reality.

"Let's say this," Cabott concluded with a laugh, "we only had a few hats behind that banner."

Bill Belichick may be the NFL's best modern coach, but Andy Reid is its most influential

Adam Kilgore

Washington Post

October 12, 2018

The 10 of them met for dinner two years ago at the NFL combine in Indianapolis, an impromptu gathering during a week of February drudgery. In a private room, the members of the 1999 Philadelphia Eagles coaching staff swapped stories about working under head coach Andy Reid: late nights, career lessons and epic steakhouse dinners when Reid would order every appetizer — and then every dessert — on the menu.

At the end, the nine former assistants huddled around Reid for a picture. Of the nine coaches standing, seven of them had been NFL head coaches. They all owed something to the man who remained seated. The night had started as a reunion, became a roast and concluded as a tribute.

"We paid homage to Coach," said Carolina Panthers Coach Ron Rivera, who started as a linebackers coach under Reid. "We really did, because he's been such an influence on all of us."

On Sunday night, Reid will take his 5-0 Kansas City Chiefs into Gillette Stadium for a showdown against Bill Belichick and the New England Patriots. The two coaches have defined their era, with obvious domination in Belichick's case and with subtle impact in Reid's. Belichick is the greatest coach in modern football. Reid may be the most important.

In his 20th season as a head coach, Reid, 60, has become one of the most influential figures in the NFL. Seven former assistants are current head coaches, including reigning Super Bowl champion Doug Pederson of the Philadelphia Eagles. That means a quarter of the league's franchises are coached by Reid or somebody who learned under him.

A greater share have been shaped in some way by his offensive outlook. Reid is an acolyte of Mike Holmgren, who learned the West Coast offense from Bill Walsh. As that style predominated, few ran it better than Reid. But he has also been at the vanguard of how the NFL is changing, seeking new concepts from the college game, implementing them into his system and, along the way, reshaping offensive football.

And still, in popular opinion, Reid stands a rung below the all-time greats. Only four — Don Shula, Tom Landry, Belichick and Paul Brown — have been to the playoffs more than Reid. Just eight have won more regular season games, but Reid has never claimed the league's ultimate prize.

"People can say what they want about head coaches and Super Bowl trophies," former Reid assistant Steve Spagnuolo said. "We know it's all about trophies. But there's not a better head football coach/CEO in this league than Andy Reid. Had we won in '04, you'd be talking about Andy Reid and Bill Belichick in the same breath. The only difference is Super Bowls. Now, it's a big difference."

Perhaps his last best chance

This season may be Reid's best chance to erase the worst parts of his reputation, to lessen the gap between him and Belichick, to win an elusive Super Bowl. Quarterback Patrick Mahomes, the rocket-armed quarterback for whom Kansas City traded up to pick in last year's draft, has become an ideal centerpiece in Reid's innovative attack and an MVP candidate. The Chiefs started last season 5-0, too, but if Mahomes can be the upgrade over Alex Smith that he seems to be, Reid may finally fill the lone hole in his career.

Belichick has coached in eight Super Bowls and won five. Reid has an 11-13 career playoff record and lost the only Super Bowl he reached — to Belichick, by three points, after the 2004 season. In popular perception, Belichick is a hoodie-clad savant with a grim visage, and Reid is a clock-botching doofus with a walrus mustache.

While Belichick has collected rings and accolades, Reid may claim a more profound impact and legacy. Two former assistants from his coaching tree (Pederson and John Harbaugh) have won Super Bowls as head coaches, and another (Rivera) coached in one. With his years-long experimentation and sudden overhaul of the West Coast offense, Reid has shaped modern NFL offense perhaps more than any other coach.

Belichick will leave a narrow mark beyond his own individual greatness. The eight NFL head coaches he produced have failed with staggering uniformity and depth. They have combined for a 160-233 regular season record (.407), no Super Bowl appearances and only one playoff victory, which came after the 2016 season when Bill O'Brien's Houston Texans beat an Oakland Raiders team forced into starting a third-string rookie quarterback. Those Texans lost the next week — to Belichick's Patriots.

Reid's coaching tree has grown so expansive for several reasons. First, he identifies coaching talent well. Coaches who worked under Reid say his meticulous organization and work ethic rub off.

"I can rarely remember a time when I didn't drive in and his car wasn't there already, or drive out and his car had left," said Brad Childress, a former Reid offensive coordinator who became the Minnesota Vikings' head coach.

A few months after Rivera started working for him, Reid called Rivera into his office and recommended he read Walsh's "Finding the Winning Edge," considered a bible among coaches. Rivera dove in and realized Reid had borrowed many of the book's teachings, particularly about how to schedule. Today, Rivera uses the lessons to map out Carolina's entire year, from minicamp practices to when coaches get vacation.

Harbaugh, the Baltimore Ravens coach, handled special teams under Reid for years in Philadelphia. When Harbaugh would visit Reid in his office, he noticed a message written on a three-by-five card behind Reid's desk. It read: "Don't Judge." Harbaugh never asked Reid about it, but it stuck with him each time he saw it, and he understood the importance.

"The point of the whole thing was, as a coach, you don't bring all your stuff into the thing," Harbaugh said. "Take people for who they are and for where they're at in their life — as football players, as coaches, whatever — and let them be who they are. Help them along the way where you can. Give them good advice."

Rivera said Reid empowered assistants, giving them opportunities that would help prepare them to be a head coach. He said Reid cherishes the coaching tree he has created.

"All of us took meticulous notes so as not to miss anything that he was doing or sharing or expressing in hopes we could use it someday for ourselves," said Spagnuolo, who went on to coach the St. Louis Rams. "It didn't take too long to figure out this man was born to coach football."

"In a never-ending battle to find unique ways to score points, I think [Reid has] really kind of invented his own offense right now," one former assistant said. (Don Wright/Associated Press)

Staying current

As Reid built a perennial contender around quarterback Donovan McNabb in Philadelphia, taking the Eagles to four consecutive NFC title games, he constantly sought innovation. He gave assistants research projects on, say, the best teams at running screen passes or red zone plays. He wanted to stay current and looked anywhere to ensure he was.

When the Eagles drafted Kevin Kolb out of Houston in 2007, Reid studied the offense Kolb ran under then-coach Art Briles, one of the earliest adopters of run-pass options, even if the term "RPO" had yet to be coined. Even back then, Reid started blending the concept into his West Coast scheme.

"These colleges and high schools have been doing it a lot longer than what we have," Reid said this week during a conference call with reporters. "So we've just kind of grown with it, and these kids know how to do that."

In 2012, Reid went 4-12 and got fired by the Eagles. The experience accelerated his desire to update his offense, to ensure he remained ahead of how rules changes and college offenses had affected the NFL.

"He saw that there was a change in our sport, especially offensively," Spagnuolo said. "And he made sure he brought in an influx of youth so that he could stay up with that. I think you're seeing that now. He was always good at creating formational stress on the defense and mismatches, but I just think he's taken it to a whole new level."

When Reid acquired Smith to be his quarterback in Kansas City, he and then-quarterbacks coach Matt Nagy studied decade-old film of Smith at Utah, where he played for Urban Meyer. They realized the zone-read plays, jet sweeps and run-pass options would not only suit Smith but also fit into where the league was headed.

The West Coast offense is built on getting the ball to fast players with space around them, using balance between runs and passes to create that space. Reid's new offensive system accomplishes the same objectives, but in wholly different fashion.

"I don't know if Bill Walsh would recognize this offense anymore," said Steve Mariucci, who coached with Reid in Green Bay and now is an NFL Network analyst. "Andy loves being the mad scientist."

"In a never-ending battle to find unique ways to score points, I think he's really kind of invented his own offense right now," said Childress, now a head coach in the new Alliance of American Football.

In many ways, Reid is a link between the way NFL teams played offense for nearly three decades and the way they'll play it in the future.

"He's over the course of time been able to modify some of the traditional West Coast principles," Belichick said this week. "The RPO certainly fits into that category, but he's done a great job incorporating that, probably as much as any team we've seen — probably more than any team we've seen."

"All of us want to leave a legacy," one former Reid assistant said. "You want to see positive outcomes for people you care for. And Andy has done that." (Justin Edmonds/Getty Images)

'On the cutting edge'

Already, Reid's strategic influence has spread around the league. Reid and Nagy overhauled their offense to fit Smith's strengths, and now Nagy is implementing those concepts in Chicago. Pederson won a Super Bowl in Philadelphia, and his offensive coordinator, Frank Reich, took his scheme to Indianapolis.

Reid's impact is not limited to coaches who worked under him. Last year, Childress worked for the Chiefs as an offensive analyst, which included studying other teams. Sometimes, when watching the Los Angeles Rams, he would spot one of the Chiefs' plays. Childress would text Rams Coach Sean McVay, "Hmmm, seems like I saw that before." McVay would jokingly acknowledge the theft, a common practice that signifies respect among coaches.

"[Reid] is on the cutting edge of offensive football year after year with different offensive coordinators, and they go out and they do the same thing around the league," Harbaugh said. "So he's the top coach in football, in that sense."

In another sense, the one coaches crave most, Reid has never been the top coach in football. That may finally change this season, but it's far from assured, or even probable. Whether the Chiefs win or not matters, but it can't change how Reid shaped his sport. Reid may or may not be remembered as a Super Bowl champion, but he will be remembered.

"All of us want to leave a legacy," Spagnuolo said. "You want to see positive outcomes for people you care for. And Andy has done that."

The new wave of former NFL backup quarterbacks who are shaping the future of the NFL's coaching ranks

Lindsay Jones
The Athletic

Nov 30, 2018

Long before Patrick Mahomes took his first snap as the Kansas City Chiefs' starting quarterback, he needed a lesson in all things Andy Reid.

Enter: Mike Kafka, then a 30-year-old former backup quarterback for Reid in Philadelphia, who was hired as an offensive quality coach in Kansas City in 2017. Part of his duties in his first NFL coaching job included serving as basically a Reid-to-English dictionary for the Chiefs' first-round quarterback.

Kafka was just two years removed from his final stint on an NFL roster (he was on three practice squads in 2015 after spending time with four other teams between 2010-2014), and could spend endless hours with Mahomes, while Reid and then-offensive coordinator Matt Nagy worked with starter Alex Smith. Kafka could teach Mahomes the intricacies of the Andy Reid offense, while relaying, through first-hand experience, what sort of expectations Reid has for his quarterbacks.

"That allowed Patrick to kind of have his own coach there, which was kind of a neat deal," Reid said.

Fast-forward to 2018. Both Mahomes and Kafka got promotions — Mahomes to starter, a role he's taken to seamlessly as he's emerged as a top MVP candidate while leading the Chiefs to a 9-2 record, and Kafka to quarterbacks coach, where he still works closely with Mahomes and backup Chad Henne, and helps Reid and his new offensive coordinator Eric Bieniemy with the game plan.

Kafka is hardly alone. He's part of a new wave of former NFL backup quarterbacks who have recently landed jobs coaching quarterbacks, trying to follow the blueprint set by other backup quarterbacks-turned-coaches like Gary Kubiak and Doug Pederson, who each won a Super Bowl in the past three years, and first-year head coaches Matt Nagy and Frank Reich.

There's 30-year-old Kellen Moore in Dallas, who parlayed his old job of backing up Dak Prescott into one where he now coaches him, and 33-year-old Kevin O'Connell in Washington, who served as the quarterback coach and passing game coordinator for 34-year-old Alex Smith. In Cleveland, Ryan Lindley, 29, joined the Browns' staff midseason to help new coordinator Freddie Kitchens as they retooled the offense for No. 1 pick Baker Mayfield. In Arizona, Byron Leftwich, just two years after joining the Cardinals staff as an intern, has risen to offensive coordinator and play-caller for first-round pick Josh Rosen.

These coaches have all found that their unique experience as a backup quarterback has uniquely prepared them to transition into coaching. If quarterbacks are the NFL's most important commodity, the right quarterback coach can't be far behind.

"Obviously I've been through it; I've been through some of the things that he has to go through now that all rookie quarterbacks have to go through. It's not foreign to me," Leftwich said. "But you can't just live off that. I believe coaching is getting guys to do it. I mean, we all can teach Xs and Os, but coaching is really trying to get a guy to do what you're asking him to do. I think some of it being a former player can help you, but you also have to have a firm understanding of the game of football to truly help somebody get better at that position."

There are plenty of reasons why former backup quarterbacks seem to make better coaches than starters, ESPN analyst and longtime NFL backup quarterback Dan Orlovsky said. The life of a backup — bouncing around the league, from team to team, learning new offensive schemes each year, playing under different coordinators and head coaches — can eventually be a long-term asset.

"You're always the guy who is really good but not good enough. Why are you not good enough is probably tied to the physical, so how do you hang on, how do you play for a long time? A lot of the cases it's because you have a good brain," Orlovsky, who played for six different teams between 2005-2017, said. "You've learned a bunch of different systems, and you see — 'Man, that's cool,' or this works or that works, so you can have this brain where you've experienced a ton of stuff and you get to see a lot of stuff that works, and you get to see a ton of stuff that doesn't work."

And so often, backup quarterbacks serve as an extension of the coaching staff, helping not just make sure the starter is ready, but also helping explain pieces of the offense to other players. That's how it worked almost immediately for O'Connell, who spent time as a backup with the Patriots and Jets between 2008-2012. O'Connell joked that even while he was working as Mark Sanchez' backup with the Jets in 2009, and again in 2011-2012, former New York head coach Rex Ryan told him not to get comfortable as a player because he was meant to be a coach. He already thought strategically about game plans when he watched film and knew one of the ways he could be most helpful in his role was to have answers to questions the starter might have.

It's been the same as a coach, even as he's been tasked with coaching players who are older and more experienced than he was, first with Josh McCown in Cleveland in 2015, and later with Alex Smith, who O'Connell first met when they both played high school football in San Diego at the same time.

"The really good ones are guys that do that and that want to be coached, they want to be helped, they want to be asking the tough questions, and if you've got answers for them, they'll ask more," O'Connell said. "If you don't, if you're not prepared for that day, that meeting, that walk through or whatever it might be, then it's going to have an effect on a veteran quarterback wanting to listen to you. That's why I always take a lot of pride in being really, really prepared for everything on a daily basis."

Leftwich, though, never saw himself as a future coach, even though in hindsight he now sees that his years playing behind Ben Roethlisberger in Pittsburgh, while being coached by then-Steelers offensive coordinator Bruce Arians, was preparing him for a second career in football, far more than his years starting in Jacksonville early in his career ever did.

"When I got to Pittsburgh and I was the backup I had the opportunity to kind of help throughout — talking to other wide receivers about what Ben would be thinking, how Ben would do it on this play, maybe you should do this," Leftwich said. "That started it really. That started it, being around that caliber of playing, to be able to see it through another player's eyes. I believed that helped me start my coaching career, from a mental standpoint."

Leftwich rattled through the list of other successful backups-turned-coaches, and the Hall of Fame starters they played behind: John Elway (Kubiak), Brett Favre (Peterson) and Jim Kelly (Reich), and wonders if doing the same for Roethlisberger will accelerate his own coaching career. Indeed, it's like he's on a coaching rocket ship, rising from intern in 2016 under Arians to offensive coordinator this year, having been elevated from quarterbacks coach in October when Mike McCoy (himself a former NFL backup quarterback) was fired.

"The second I did it, I fell in love with it," Leftwich said. "It's something that I should have always been thinking of doing, but when you're a player, you don't really think of coaching, because you see yourself as a player. As I got older and I retired, I realized that football —I wanted football in my life."

In Kansas City, Kafka could be merely following the career plan established first by Pederson and later by Nagy. Play for Reid, coach under him, eventually turn that into a head coaching job down the line. Henne, Mahomes' backup, spent one offseason as Kafka's teammate in Jacksonville (Kafka did not make the Jags' 53-man roster in 2013), and now sees his one-time quarterback peer "in the line" of future offensive coordinators or head coaches.

"The league is getting younger and younger, and you see guys like Sean McVay and a lot of coaches are up and coming. If you have the right demeanor, the leadership about you, you can run a football team," Henne said.

If that happens, he'll have Reid, and perhaps that first year of intimate coaching experience with Mahomes, to thank.

Andy Reid Believes the Best is Yet to Come for CB Kendall Fuller

Matt McMullen

Chiefs.com

March 29, 2018

The Kansas City Chiefs pulled off a true blockbuster of a move earlier this month, acquiring cornerback Kendall Fuller and a draft pick from the Washington Redskins in exchange for quarterback Alex Smith.

Bringing Fuller to Kansas City certainly came at a price, as Smith led the Chiefs to four playoff appearances in his five seasons, but with second-year quarterback Patrick Mahomes ready to take over under center, the 23-year-old Fuller was worth the gamble for General Manager Brett Veach and Head Coach Andy Reid – and for good reason.

Fuller recorded four interceptions, 10 passes defensed and a forced fumble last season – all improvements from his rookie campaign in 2016 – but it was the advanced metrics that really demonstrated his effectiveness. In fact, according to the folks at Pro Football Focus, Fuller was the sixth-best cornerback in all of football last season.

The vast majority of that work was done while covering the slot, where Fuller allowed a league-low 55.0 passer rating and just 0.74 yards per play in coverage.

It was a performance that drew the praise from around the league, and now in Kansas City, the Chiefs are confident that Fuller can replicate those results while playing as an outside corner.

"He's got tremendous upside and I think he's just tapping into that," said Reid at the annual league meetings this week. "He developed, you could argue, into the best inside defender - pass defender - in the league. Now, he has an opportunity to step outside and do that also - just kind of add that to his repertoire."

Reid indicated that Fuller will see plenty of action as an outside corner in 2018 while occasionally bouncing back inside if the situation calls for it.

The Chiefs dealt for Fuller with that plan in mind, and though it came at a cost, Reid believes the best is yet to come for the third-year defensive back.

"We felt like we needed defensive and secondary help, so I thought it was a win-win for both sides, which doesn't happen very often in this league," Reid said. "I thought it was great for the Redskins and I think it's going to be great for us, too."

Spencer Ware on His Family's Battle with Sickle Cell Anemia: "I Want My Mom to See Her Son Play"

Matt McMullen

Chiefs.com

April 18, 2018

One in every ten African-Americans is a carrier of the trait and there's no known cure, though many people have probably never heard of it.

It's called sickle cell anemia - a blood condition that restricts the flow of oxygen in the body – and it's an enormous part of Kansas City Chiefs' tailback Spencer Ware's life.

"A lot of people in my family, most importantly my mom, have sickle cell anemia," Ware said on Monday. "It's something that's affected people really close to me. I carry the trait and I know some other players that are dealing with it, too."

In sickle cell anemia, according to the Mayo Clinic, "the red blood cells become rigid and sticky and are shaped like sickles or crescent moons. These irregularly shaped cells can get stuck in small blood vessels, which can slow or block blood flow and oxygen to parts of the body."

Ware carries the trait, meaning he doesn't have any medical issues himself, but he can pass along the disease genetically. His mom, along with others in his family, actually have the condition and have had to adjust their lives accordingly.

His mom, for example, can't travel to Kansas City because of the lack of adult treatment facilities in the area.

"My mom can't really come to games because there aren't any sickle cell adult doctors in the Kansas City area," Ware explained. "I just want my mom to be able to see her son play."

With that sentiment in mind, Ware decided to do something about it this offseason with the creation of the Spencer Ware Sickle Cell Anemia Foundation.

"It's in the early stages. I have my first event on April 26, the first day of the NFL Draft, and that will be to raise money for and to bring awareness to those with sickle cell," Ware said. "I want to make people aware of the actual disease."

From there, Ware is hopeful that increased awareness will lead to a brighter future for those with the disease and other conditions that are largely overlooked.

"The goal is to help people in this world," Ware said. "The foundation not only wants to bring awareness to sickle cell, but also to be there for others and to be a backbone of support for other causes that most people may not know about."

To learn more about Ware's foundation, check out its Facebook page and its website.

Leadership Personified: Reggie Ragland's Remarkable Journey Has Built Him for This Moment

BI Kissel

Chiefs.com

July 20, 2018

There were only a handful of people in the small coach's office in the back of the locker room.

It was the morning of a school day late in the spring of 2014, and Reggie Ragland—the former Bob Jones High School (AL) standout—returned to his alma mater to seek counsel from those who have known him since before he was the eighth grader playing Varsity basketball, or since before he was the five-star football recruit known by everyone living within a 50-mile radius.

Reggie wasn't a late-bloomer when it came to his athletic ability—he was always a step above his peers in that way, but in this moment, he wasn't in a good place.

He sat there in this small office, which can only be described as the quintessential high school football coach's office—featuring concrete floors and cement blocks for walls, which here were painted red and white to represent the school's mascot—the Patriots. There were a few work stations for the assistant coaches, plus a small couch, and a few lockers in the back.

He was headed into his junior year at the University of Alabama, and was, at the time, dealing with an amalgamation of adversities that were testing the resolve of a person who—from an outsider's perspective—had been the man his entire life and therefore shouldn't have any reason to doubt himself.

The guy who possessed an admittedly quiet but genuine and reserved soul had always been the rock for his family, friends, fellow classmates, and even his teachers, but in this moment, that same guy needed others to lean on and confide in.

Reggie had just recently lost his best friend in a car accident, found out that both his mother and father were dealing with serious health issues, and football, which was always one of his saving graces, wasn't the same escape it had been in the past. It became another 45-pound weight added to the bar on his back, and he was doubting whether or not Alabama football was a part of his future.

Reggie in the stands of Bryant–Denny Stadium at the University of Alabama.

He hadn't been playing much in Tuscaloosa for the nation's top program—tallying just 25 tackles in his first two years combined, and he didn't understand his role or what he was being asked to do in their defense.

Reggie was tagged by those around him as a future professional athlete before he turned 14 years old, and now he was in jeopardy of being left behind by a program that brings in the country's best players and recruits in every year.

Consequently, when you add in the personal tragedy and family health issues he was dealing with that were out of his control—the pressure all came together and got to a place where he knew something had to change.

"I remember him sitting in the coaches' office and thinking he wasn't where he thought he should be at the time," Bryan Styles, Reggie's high school defensive coordinator at Bob Jones in Madison, Alabama, explained of that day. "This was his 'make or break,' and I feel like he was at that point of, 'I'm either fixing to come home or I'm fixing to grow up and decide I'm a man.'

Ragland's former Defensive Coordinator at Bob Jones, Bryan Styles

"I was worried," Styles, who remembered being in that office with a couple of Reggie's former teammates and some other coaches, added.

It's not hyperbole. This was a time in Reggie's life where his journey hit a fork in the road. It was up to him on which path he wanted to take.

"I was worried about myself because of all the stuff that was going on," Reggie explained. "That really messed with me a lot. I knew I had to go and do something—either put up or shut up."

In that moment, Reggie accepted his own challenge to dedicate himself solely to the game—nothing else mattered after that, and he soon began to demonstrate the same leadership traits the people of Madison had already come to know about him.

Robbie Clark didn't always have the easiest time in school.

He was autistic, which meant he saw and learned things differently, and that didn't always jive well with his classmates. There was teasing, laughs at his expense, and plenty of teachable moments for the kids who didn't know what being on the "spectrum" meant.

Many of the lessons learned by Robbie's classmates over the years came at the hand of his friend—Reggie, who was never shy about letting the other kids know what he thought about their actions.

The two friends first met in the third grade at Challenger Elementary school before they eventually moved on to middle school together, and Reggie, who was always bigger than everyone else, looked out for his friend.

At 10 years old, Reggie also already understood some emotional dynamics.

Reggie and Robbie at their 8th grade graduation

"The day the boys had their 5th grade graduation—we were talking about them going into middle school together, and of course being the parent of an autistic child, I was scared to death," Maggie Clark—Robbie's mother, recalled. "But then Reggie looked me in the eyes and said, 'Don't worry Ms. Clark, nobody's gonna mess with Robbie, I've got him.'

"Even today, Reggie doesn't remember saying those words," she added. "But I will never forget them or the comfort they brought me. Reggie will always be family to us."

Robbie ultimately wrote a book specifically for autistic kids to help them get through school.

In the book, In My Words: Stories of an Autistic Boy, Robbie shared several stories of situations in which he was picked on in school, and who was there to help him.

"After PE class, everyone was changing back into their clothes," he wrote. "I was trying to hurry up so I would not be late to class. I did not like being late...

One day, some boys were in the locker room when everyone was getting changed, and they took my clothes from me. They kept throwing them back and forth and wouldn't give them back. I tried to stop them. They were laughing at me. I got so furious and wanted to cry. They finally gave me my clothes back. I told the coaches about it, but a couple of days later, they did it again...

Other kids told me (later) that Devin (another friend) and my other friend Reggie made sure those boys didn't bother me again."

It was true. Those boys didn't bother Robbie anymore.

It was a cycle that happened with a number of kids over the years, and it only happened with each of them one time. They learned their lesson quickly.

When recently asked about their relationship, Reggie simply said "that's my dude" about Robbie and didn't go into any of the details of the times he had Robbie's back, or vice versa as Robbie always made sure Reggie was on top of his schoolwork as well.

Reggie and Robbie a couple years ago

But it's a consistent thing about Reggie—he's not going to pat his own back about all the times he did something for a friend. He's not wired that way.

"It's about right and wrong," he explained. "That's it. Be a good person. Believe in others and try and make the world a better place."

Reggie protecting and being a good friend to Robbie isn't the only example of him displaying leadership characteristics not normally seen of kids before they're teenagers. He was never afraid to speak his mind and stand up for anyone who needed it, and that carried on in high school.

It helped that everyone knew Reggie. He was the best athlete in the area and everyone knew him, and he had a certain standing amongst his peers because of that. He could affect the dynamic of any room he was in at any given moment.

Reggie's graduating class at Bob Jones, which was one of the bigger schools in the area, wasn't the easiest to teach. They had plenty of issues with kids getting suspended and causing other various problems.

Reggie sought to be a positive influence with the standing he possessed as an athlete, and it was noticed and appreciated by his teachers.

"If somebody had a joke, he might look up but he wouldn't laugh, and I think the other student's respected that," Demarius Anderson, Reggie's Algebra teacher his freshman year, explained. "I feel like his class got better—the behavior was better as a result of how Reggie carried himself.

"I really feel like he helped me...it was like I had a bodyguard."

Reggie may have been a natural athlete, but he wasn't a natural when it came to math, although he did earn the "Most Improved Student" Award out of a class of more than 500 students. He had raised his grade from a D to an A.

Mrs. Anderson stayed in touch with Reggie after he graduated, and she clearly remembered one visit he made to the school in March after his last year at Alabama.

It was right in the middle of all of the workouts he was doing to try and impress teams leading up to the NFL Draft that year. He was getting ready for his Pro Day and all of the team visits he had—basically the biggest interviews of his life.

She was having problems with her class and confided in Reggie that she had a standing offer to leave education after 13 years to return to an old job with a telecom company.

She was going to take that job on Friday. Reggie came to the school on Monday.

He came in and spoke with her students, took the time to meet and talk with them individually—explaining the importance of education and why it mattered in the bigger picture that's often lost among teens who are constantly thinking of only the here and now.

For the kids, this message was coming from a legendary alum who was on the verge of being drafted to the NFL just months after winning a National Championship at Alabama, and one who was named the SEC's Defensive Player of the Year that season. He had the status and the aura for those kids to hang on every word he said.

"That was everything to me," Mrs. Anderson explained. "The whole class changed after his visit. He really made a difference for those kids. I mean, those students were struggling."

Mrs. Anderson decided to stay in education that day after she was reminded by Reggie of the impact education has on the kids' lives she's working with every day.

Another one of his teachers, Mrs. Roberts, who teaches English and is still very close with Reggie, explained that over the years she's had a lot of the football players in her classes at Bob Jones, and she still does, and if she sees one that needs help or is really struggling, she knows exactly what to do.

"Any time I see a kid like that—in that position—I text Reggie because he's immediately on it," she explained. "Reggie was one of those kids that never got involved in all that stuff—the drugs and alcohol, and he's so good now about stepping up and mentoring these young kids and getting them on the right path."

Mrs. Roberts also remembered not only how crazy Reggie's graduating class was, but how his presence around them always seemed to help her out.

"It was kind of insanity in there," she recalled. "But [Reggie] would always set the tone for how to respond and how to act. When he spoke, people listened. He wasn't overly talkative or loud or anything like that, but if he had something to say, people stopped and they listened.

"He could just command a room with little effort."

Reggie and Mrs. Roberts on the day Reggie was announced as an Under Armour All-American

In all of her years of teaching, Mrs. Roberts said she's never had anyone else who could do that.

"Nobody has ever had his maturity or his ability to lead a group and command that kind of respect," she added. "Nobody has even come close to that, honestly."

On the football field, Reggie was the kind of player who doesn't come around often as well.

To him, it stood out above the rest.

Bob Jones hadn't beaten Decatur—a local rival—in 14 years, and they were facing a key fourth-and-4 late in the game, which was close at the time.

"They're like what do you want to do here? And I'm like, 'Just throw it to Reggie,'" Rose laughed. "We ran a Y-Cross and [Reggie, who also played tight end] caught it and ran about 45 yards down the field to inside the five-yard line, and we ended up scoring and went on to win the game."

Since that day, Bob Jones has won eight-straight over Decatur.

During Reggie's three years (2009-11) as an All-State outside linebacker, Bob Jones amassed a record of 27-5.

In the previous nine years before that, they had just two winning seasons.

Rose credits a lot of their success—even to this day—to Reggie's leadership and character. He was the guy who showed up early, held his peers accountable, and never made anyone feel inferior.

"For you to be a great team, your best player has to be that guy," Rose explained of Reggie, who he explained never said anything but 'Yes, sir. No, sir,' to him during those days. "We're still feeding off what he did here because he helped us take our program from a very mediocre 5-5 one, to one of the best in the state year in year out for the last ten years.

"I think he's always been extremely humble, and to receive the national attention he's gotten since he was 12 or 13 years old and remain that way—it's special," Rose added. "It wasn't unusual for us to come in at 7-7:15 in the morning and Reggie was in there sweeping the locker room.

"Nobody asked him to do it, but he was there and it needed to be swept, so he swept it up. I think that says a lot about him."

Reggie recently held a free football camp for hundreds of kids who live in the area.

"He's not some far away character that you just see play on TV," Rose explained. "Reggie is in our locker room, our weight room, on our field and in our community. When he gets off time, he comes here. He's not in the Bahamas. He's at Bob Jones High School."

That school is part of Reggie's foundation—almost a defining character in his journey.

Another one of those defining characters is his best friend Dez, who always made sure Reggie was on the right path, particularly when anyone was tempting him to go the other direction. There was always a lot of attention on Reggie, so Dez was always busy.

"I'll never forget the first time I met Dez," Reggie, who showed up to high school a week late because he was at an AAU basketball tournament in Orlando, laughed. "He walked up on me and said, 'Man, I don't like you."

"I'm like, 'Man, what do you mean?'" Reggie, who was taken aback, responded.

"Because you big as hell," Dez laughed.

It was the start of a friendship that helped guide Reggie through years of notoriety, accolades and temptations that could have otherwise put his journey on a different path.

"After that we just got real cool, and I got real close with his family," Reggie noted.

Even if Dez wasn't always doing the right things, he never wanted the same for Reggie.

"He'd always tell me, 'If anyone has a chance of making it, you've got that chance," Reggie said, explaining Dez's point of why Reggie shouldn't be hanging around him at certain times.

"Ever since then, I knew he was a real friend of mine," Reggie noted.

Dez played football, too. He wore No. 9 while Reggie wore No. 19. They were a pair—always together.

"Dez was the glue of that football team," Rose explained. "He wasn't the best football player on the team, matter of fact we probably made some packages to make sure we could get him on the field, but he was the glue that held everybody together.

"He and Reggie just had an outstanding relationship."

That relationship continued on after Reggie left for Alabama as a five-star player with a character and work ethic that should have made for an immediate impact in Tuscaloosa, but he'd soon learn it wasn't going to be that easy.

The first two years at Alabama weren't exactly what Reggie had expected. He had played only sparingly—amassing just 25 total tackles over that time, which was tough for a player who had always been the best player on whatever team he was on.

There were zero issues with his work ethic, character, or ability. He had quickly made the switch from outside linebacker to inside, per the request of Alabama head coach Nick Saban.

It just hadn't clicked for Reggie yet.

"It's the first thing Coach Saban tells everyone, especially the freshman," Reggie recalled. "All those stars you got, excuse my language, but that st is gone. Like, this is my world, this is my house, you're going to do what I say. You're either going to get with it or get gone."

That kind of approach was exactly what Reggie needed, but it took time to get there.

"I think it's pretty typical when guys come in that they have sort of this one set of standards that are created and set by external factors, which are expectations," Saban, who has guided Alabama to six National Championships and won two National Coach of the Year Awards, explained. "They don't really understand fully what it takes to be a great college player, but they have those expectations of what they want to accomplish.

"I think in their first two years, and sometimes longer, it takes guys a little more time to realize what they need to do to be a good player."

"He's going to put you in the perfect position to be successful on the field and off the field," Reggie explained of playing for Saban. "The guys who understand that early are the ones who are very successful. Like a Julio Jones, Mark Ingram, Amari Cooper, or Landon Collins, a bunch of those guys, they all knew that. It took me a little bit longer to understand that because I get frustrated really fast."

Early in his career, Reggie studied and knew what to do, but when he got on the field, his mind would go blank and it frustrated him.

Those mistakes led to other players, who were also five-star or highly-recruited players—guys like C.J. Mosely, Nico Johnson and Trey Depriest, getting on the field ahead of Reggie early in his career.

"If I was [Saban], I wouldn't have believed in me either because off the field I was doing the right thing, but on the field, I wasn't accountable and I wasn't up to the standard he wanted," Reggie added.

"I think in his first two years at Alabama he probably considered doing something else," Rose explained of watching his former standout go through such a tough time early at Alabama. "Life is difficult and we all wish we could wake up and it's 72 degrees and you're walking downhill with the wind at your back, but we know that's not true—there's an obstacle every day.

"I think after two years, he was kind of not knowing what he was going to do."

The problems soon hit home, too.

Around that same time, Reggie found out his mother, Ann White, was a diabetic, and that his father, Reggie Ragland, Sr., had suffered a stroke.

His mother was the rock of the family—the one who always preached that if he was going to start something, he was also going to finish it.

"My mom made sure that I kept my head right in school," Reggie explained, "but my dad made sure I had that mental toughness on and off the field."

Reggie's father helped instill the passion and drive for whatever Reggie was going to end up doing in life.

His dad was the one to always keep him grounded, going through the mistakes Reggie made in the game that night back in high school, while everyone else was busy singing his praises.

"My dad was always being hard on me and making sure that people were never going to give me nothing in life, basically," Reggie noted. "He always meant well. Me and him bump heads like that all the time, but that's my dog though. I love that man."

Reggie remembered one day when he was seven years old that his father took him out to work with him. His dad had worked as a laborer—doing whatever he could, whether it was painting houses, cutting grass, or whatever—to support his family.

"He was like, 'Man, do you want to do this type of work or do you want to be able to do what you want to do?" Reggie recalled of the conversation with his dad that day, which has stuck with him.

Now, two of the most influential people in Reggie's life were struggling with their health and he was a few hours away at college—also struggling. And all of this came after being destined for greatness since he was a kid by those who were now wondering what had happened.

Then, it got even worse.

Reggie received a phone call the day before the LSU game his Sophomore year that changed everything.

"My cousin called me and was like, 'Hey, have you heard about Dez? He got in a car wreck and died."

Reggie's best friend—the one who had been real with him from the day they first met and who had always gone out of his way to make sure Reggie was on the right path—even if he, himself, wasn't—was now gone.

Just like that.

"I'll never forget I had a test that day, too," Reggie, whose tone went from cheery and playful to dark and reflective immediately, explained. "Everything in my room, I just threw it against the wall, broke my door, punched a hole in it, then went and took the test, left, and then just really sat in silence for a long period of time.

"That was really my friend. I could truly say that man was a friend of mine."

For Reggie, the adversities were piling up.

"It was crazy because like a year before, I had another real close friend of mine who also died in car wreck," Reggie noted. "That was the day of the Tennessee game. I mean, losing two people I grew up with and that I was actually close with, it really hurt me."

It was a lot to deal with.

"All of it can either make me or break me," he recalled telling himself.

Between the struggles his mother and father were going through health-wise, the personal loss of his best friend, and the fact that football wasn't going well, Reggie needed help, and he knew where to go to find his answers—the same place he had always gone.

Reggie sat in that coach's office at Bob Jones for a few hours, talking out his goals, plans, and how he was going to change his approach to everything.

Those who were around him that day were worried because they'd never seen this side of him, but they also knew the character and work ethic of the person they were dealing with. He had always been there for others and now it was their turn to be there for him.

Reggie's mother and father told him they were going to be alright and that they wanted him to concentrate on football, as did his godmother, Roslyn Barbee, who is another instrumental figure in his story. He often stays at her house when he's back home. He says it's quiet there and allows him to relax, at least when he's not playing with his six-year old niece over there.

During this transition in Reggie's life, he grew closer to his faith and shut out most-everyone who wasn't directly involved with helping him achieve his football goals. He became singular-focused on being the player he was destined to become.

"I locked myself away from everyone," he explained.

Then, it just clicked for him. He decided to step back and "just play football." He credits former Alabama linebackers coach Kevin Steele for helping him flip that switch. Steele is now the defensive coordinator at Auburn.

Reggie used everything he had gone through over the previous year for motivation.

"I feel like it made me mentally tougher and stronger as a man and as a person," Reggie explained. "I'm not happy at all that happened, but I'm glad I went through it to make me even better man and better person to really understand values of life and loving people, and since that happened, I'm loving people even more now.

"My mom didn't ever drop the rope, my dad ain't drop the rope, and God ain't never dropped the rope on me," Reggie explained using a motto they used one year at Alabama. "He brought me this far and not to let me go. I'm a firm believer in that and I'm going to keep going—always going to keep going."

It didn't take long after that attitude change that Reggie saw a difference in his role on the Alabama defense, and he naturally became more assertive.

"It wasn't two weeks later from when he went back to practice that I started hearing stories about how well he was doing," Rose explained. "And from the moment he stepped back on Alabama's campus that year, he was the starting linebacker."

Reggie started 13 games for Alabama as a junior and finished with 93 tackles (10.5 for loss). He was becoming the player everyone had always expected him to be.

He returned to Alabama for his senior year and passed on the NFL because, for one, he promised his mother he'd get a degree, which he accomplished as he graduated with a degree in Consumer Affairs. He was also a finalist for the Senior CLASS Award, which honors student-athletes who make a difference on and off the field. He was a part of Alabama's leadership council and dedicated more than 50 hours of his time to community service—visiting hospitals, churches, and schools.

But he also returned for his final year because he had to leave the last game of his junior season with a concussion, and he didn't want that to be the last memory he had of playing in college.

Alabama's head strength and conditioning coach Scott Cochran remembers the day Reggie first started running with the first-team defense as a junior. He said it was the first time he really noticed a change in him, and the leadership everyone who had ever known Reggie knew about really began to manifest itself.

"He took the team over one time," Cochran explained of one summer conditioning session heading into Reggie's senior year. "I literally could have just walked off the field because in the summertime—it's the players and the strength coaches—there's no other coaches around during that time. It's just us.

"We run together as a group and he didn't like one of the reps," Cochran explained. "He didn't like the 110's we were running. It was like the fourth or fifth rep and he yelled, 'Start it over.'

"And I'm like, 'Huh? So, we're going to run 16 of these and you want to start over after 5? The bigs might kill you,'" Cochran recalled saying to Reggie that day.

"I'm a big too though, so let's go," Reggie answered.

"We started over, and that's when I said, 'OK, we're good. You got it. It's your team," Cochran recalled.

Cochran added that it's rare for a player—even at Alabama—to ever do anything like that, and that Reggie had never been on a team with someone who had done that before.

"That was all him on his own," Cochran noted.

That's the same year Alabama ultimately won one of their 17 National Championships in the program's rich and storied history. That's also the year Reggie was named the SEC's Defensive Player of the Year and a consensus First-Team All-American.

It was all connected.

Reggie crouches next to a plaque honoring Alabama's 2015 National Championship outside Bryant—Denny Stadium at the University of Alabama.

"If the player isn't taking over than the coach has to, and if the coach has to then he has more investment in the team than the players do," Cochran added of Reggie's leadership and what it meant that day, and all of the other days he had done similar things. "It's not a jerk coming off, it's a humble guy who wants to win and he's going to do whatever it takes to get there, and you just have to give him permission.

"You have to give him permission to take the team over."

Reggie got permission, and he succeeded with that responsibility—both on and off the field.

He won the local media's "good guy award," which is given to the player who was voted the best and most-friendly by the beat writers who cover the team on a daily basis.

"He always came up with a big smile on his face," Charlie Potter, who works for 247 Sports and covers the Alabama football program, explained of Reggie. "He always asked how everyone was doing and it seemed genuine—a lot of that can seem forced or fake, but Reggie always seemed like a guy who really cared about other people."

"I tried to be real and be the same towards everybody," Reggie said.

"He's going to keep it real with you," Cochran added. "I don't think he tries to put on a front or a fake, which is hard these days with that generation you'd think that that's the first thing they're going to do, but he was very genuine in everything he did."

Saban—the guy at the forefront of Reggie's football makeover—couldn't have been happier to watch the development over the years of someone who became one the best players to ever go through the program, which is the most-dominant one in the history of college football.

"He was the signal-caller on defense, so everyone looked to him for direction," Saban explained. "Not only in what we were going to play, but how we were going to play it. I think he was really a good leader for us, he cared about his teammates. He always set a good example. He was somebody that other people could emulate, and I think it showed in not only how he performed, but how the players around him performed.

"I think he represents the epitome of what we'd love every player to be—not only for when they're a player here, but also when they leave here. They want to come back and they want to be a part of it."

Reggie left college on a high note. He had accomplished everything he wanted to after a rough couple of years to begin his time in Tuscaloosa.

And heading into the NFL Draft that spring, he was considered the top middle linebacker available by most experts, and the majority of people had him mocked in the middle-to-late first round.

Then just a few hours before the draft, there was a leaked report that claimed Reggie had an "enlarged aorta," and everything he had worked for was put into flux. Teams had to go back and re-check their medical evaluations of him at the 11th hour, and some, reportedly, pushed him down their boards after that.

Reggie has his suspicions on where the report came from, but doesn't know, or won't say, for sure.

Ultimately, he fell to the Buffalo Bills in the second round and was taken with the No. 41 overall pick.

Then, soon after arriving in Buffalo, there was another setback.

During training camp, Reggie suffered a torn ACL before he ever even took the field for a game. It cost him his entire rookie season.

A year later, the Bills decided Reggie was expendable before he was even back to 100 percent, and that was to the tune of a future mid-round pick from the Chiefs. It was one of the first moves made by thennew Chiefs' general manger Brett Veach.

"He came right in the midst of the whole thing, so you have no real foundation, no background in the system," Chiefs' defensive coordinator Bob Sutton explained of Reggie joining the team at the end of the preseason. "He was also coming off the injury, so there was a lot going on when he got here. I think credit goes to him and (inside linebackers' coach) Mark DeLeone, who worked with him on the side outside of practice time, to bring him along."

Reggie didn't see any action for the Chiefs' defense for the first three games last year, but steadily saw an increase in playing time—leading to a career-high of 47 snaps played in Week 7 against the New York Giants.

That's where it all started.

Reggie ended up starting the final 10 games of the season for the Chiefs' defense and finished with 44 total tackles, including a dominant performance against his former team—the Buffalo Bills—in Week 12. He finished that game with a season-high eight tackles and helped hold Bills' running back LeSean McCoy—one of the league's top players and who finished fourth in the league in rushing—to just 49 yards on 22 carries.

"Last year was only a little taste of what I can do," Reggie smiled. "I appreciate the Chiefs giving me the opportunity to come back out and play football and do what I love to do."

This offseason, which is the first healthy one of his NFL career, Reggie has gotten himself into the best shape of his life, and that's not just coming from Reggie, but from the guy who has been training Reggie since he was a freshman in high school.

Andy McCloy, who owns BCI Performance and Fitness in Madison and has trained several current and former NFL players, probably knows more about Reggie the athlete than anyone out there.

"From the minute I first met him, there was just kind of this aura around him," McCloy, who had pictures of Reggie from high school on the wall of the entry way of his gym, explained. "His abilities were always significantly different than his peers—call it God's plan, call it destiny—something along those lines, but I think his potential is limitless.

"I don't think we've seen even close to the best version of what he's capable of putting out there. He's a next-level type of guy and I just think as he learns how to be a pro, gets integrated more in the Kansas City system, we're going to see more and more of that come out."

McCloy, who also trained Dez when he and Reggie were together in school, saw what happened when tragedy struck that group of friends.

"That hurt a lot of people and there were a lot of people who went the wrong direction because of that, but Reggie stood tall and carried on and I think it's been a huge motivator and driver for him over the years," he said.

"I think about Dez all the time. All the time," Reggie added. "Any time I ride to go over and workout with Andy in the morning, I pass the graveyard and I always look and see Dez's tombstone. I visited it for the first time in like two years a couple of months ago because it's just hard going out there.

"I just knew it was time to go out there. I'm always talking to him, thinking about him, but I needed to go out there and see him. But it's tough, man. It's very tough."

Dez was one of the first people to not just believe that Reggie would find himself in the position he's in today—because most people saw him as a future professional athlete, whether that was fair or not. But Dez was the one who was actively shielding Reggie away from things that could have jeopardized the course of this seemingly destined path. He was that friend.

"I think he'd be proud of me," Reggie noted. "I think he would."

Reggie, who began at Alabama wearing No. 18, decided to make the change to No. 19—the same number he wore in high school, to honor his friend, who had worn No. 9 when they played together.

"My thinking is if I always have a "9" on my jersey—he's always going to be there with me," Reggie, who chose to wear the No. 59 with the Chiefs, explained.

After finally seeing some NFL action last season, Reggie now heads into his second year with even more to prove—for his family, his fallen friends, his teammates, and for those who have always believed in him.

He's finally healthy and had an entire offseason to get stronger and faster, and he's ready to take the next step as a playmaker and as another leader for the Chiefs' defense, which isn't short in that area.

This offseason, when the Chiefs signed free agent linebacker Anthony Hitchens to start alongside Reggie, the first person Hitchens heard from was Reggie.

They quickly developed a bond—hanging out at baseball games and spending time together away from the facility.

"Those two are going to set the tone for our entire defense," Chiefs' general manager Brett Veach noted at a press conference earlier this offseason.

Then, when the Chiefs took Ole Miss' Breeland Speaks with their first pick of the NFL Draft this year, Reggie immediately reached out and welcomed him to the team. He did that with several of the rookies and other new additions to the team as well.

"One thing about a leader—you've got to know your personnel," Reggie explained. "I'm always talking to people because I just try to understand everybody because I want this thing to go great. I want everybody to be successful because if I'm successful and he's successful, that means the whole team is going to be successful."

The Chiefs' defense is filled with leaders at every level, and the voice of another guy in that room who has demonstrated elite leadership qualities throughout his entire life is only a good thing.

Simply stated: Reggie personifies leadership.

He spent his childhood sticking up for people like Robbie Clark—then going as far to assure Robbie's mother that she didn't need to worry about her autistic son going to middle school because Reggie, who was still only 11 years old at the time, would take care of him.

He helped teachers like Mrs. Roberts and Mrs. Anderson control classes full of students who had a history of behavioral issues. He'd sweep the locker room before school as a five-star recruit and one of the top high school players in the country—not because he was asked to, but simply because it was needed.

In college, he demanded the best football players in the country start a summer conditioning session over one day in the heat because "it wasn't good enough."

Basically, that's the journey of Reggie Ragland. It's a documented trail of humble leadership, earned success through adversity, and determination.

He's been challenged and he's overcome. He's never bought into the hype or let success change him—even when he had every reason to.

He's everything you want in a football player, a member of your community, and a face of your franchise.

And based on his story, the best is still yet to come.

"One thing I've always tried to do is be great by people because you never know who you're going to need in life," Reggie, who is beginning a foundation to help disadvantaged people, explained. "I've always tried to be the best person I can be towards people, and I want to keep being a good role model on and off the field—giving people chances, giving them a senseof hope."

While a lot of fans might see Reggie Ragland as a reason for hope for the Chiefs' defense next season, the people of Madison, Alabama and Bob Jones High School see a lot more than that. They see the example of what you're supposed to aspire to become.

They have the answer because they know the man and they know the story.

And now the rest of us do, too.

Nate Taylor
The Athletic

July 28, 2018

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. — Every day, Derrick Nnadi talks to his father for encouragement, and every morning, Fred Nnadi tries to think of just the correct words to share with his son through text messages.

With the help of his father, Derrick has successfully navigated every level of football he has played in life. The defensive tackle arrived at the Chiefs' training camp Sunday and began his rookie season by asking his father for more wisdom. Fred reminded his son of the NFL draft in April, and how being selected by the Chiefs was his gateway to prove himself in the league.

Throughout their chats this week, Fred has asked one question to motivate his son: Have you done your job?

When it comes to inspiration, Derrick is speaking with the right man. Fred, a 63-year-old Nigerian immigrant, has become an American citizen, made a successful career in engineering and has raised seven children into adulthood with his wife, Christy.

"My father is probably the hardest-working person I've ever met in my life," Derrick said Tuesday. "He's told me tons and tons of stories."

Each story holds a lesson, a reminder of how success is developed from determination.

Derrick, listed at 6-foot-1 and 312 pounds, wants to become an immediate contributor for the Chiefs, a player strong enough to help improve the team's run defense. He has spent hours learning the playbook. He has taken notes during meetings when defensive coordinator Bob Sutton goes through the plays. Derrick wants to play as many snaps as he can in practice to polish his techniques. He plans to earn his way into the Chiefs' defensive line rotation.

Before camp, Derrick, 22, wondered what gesture he could do for his father to demonstrate his appreciation. When Fred learned of Derrick's intentions, he explained to his son that he didn't want anything material.

"In this career, there are going to be a lot of people that are going to call, and every time they call you, they're going to want something," Fred told Derrick. "As your father, if I call you, the only thing I want you to do is be a better you."

When he was young, Fred said the biggest attribute he learned from his father was courage. John Nnadi was a tribal chief in Nigeria who had several wives and many children.

"My father was a very wealthy man," Fred said in a telephone interview Thursday. "When I was growing up, we were privileged."

Nigeria, however, changed in 1967 when the country broke into a civil war to become an independent nation from the United Kingdom. As the government's conscription increased, Fred, a teenager at the time, wanted to join the army to fight in the war. Fred was grateful his father didn't discourage him, and from that moment on, he wanted to improve his life.

Fred arrived in America with his brother in 1978 and became an engineering student at Old Dominion. He grew to love the country, even though the culture was completely different. In 1980, Fred made Virginia Beach, Va., his home. Christy followed Fred from Nigeria, and the family grew; Derrick became the couple's youngest child on May 9, 1996.

Derrick was big from the start. He wanted to run on the track and field team in middle school, but the school didn't have a uniform that fit Derrick's large frame. The team that could give him a proper uniform was the football team, so as an eighth grader, Derrick began to understand and enjoy the sport. So did his father.

"I love football, and I always have an opinion," said Fred, who grew up playing soccer. "I'm just like every person who watches the game."

Fred attended every game Derrick played at Ocean Lakes High in Virginia Beach. As one of the biggest players on the field, Derrick was encouraged by Fred to dominate his opponent at the line of scrimmage. Together, the father and son created a mantra for Derrick to remember on the field: "When you get to the field, nobody is better than you, nobody is bigger than you, nobody is stronger than you."

"I would say, 'You have to remember you are better than anybody else, and you have to be,'" Fred said. "I went on and on, and I didn't know if he would pick it up."

Derrick did. He become one of the best defensive linemen in the country during his senior year when he recorded 20 sacks and 71 tackles while receiving scholarship offers from several powerhouse programs. Derrick learned the nuances of the game quickly, and though he has a gentle personality, he became a fierce competitor both on the field and in the weight room.

"He's one of the most talented athletes I've had here, but also one of the hardest-working," Ocean Lakes coach Chris Scott told The Virginian-Pilot in February 2014.

At Florida State, Derrick impressed his coaches with his willingness to accept criticism and listen when being taught something new. Fred would advise Derrick that the player's voice didn't matter when it came to the coaches, the men who controlled his playing time.

In his four seasons at Florida State, Derrick played in 48 games and collected 165 tackles to go along with eight sacks. He was one of the most consistent defensive players on the field — and he became one of the toughest and strongest. As a junior, Derrick benched 525 pounds and squatted 750 pounds. All of his teammates, in amazement, agreed, listing him as the strongest player on the team in a poll on Rivals.com.

More importantly to Fred: Derrick graduated in December with a bachelor's degree in social science.

"You want to be the best of the best of the best of the best," Derrick said, repeating the phrase his father used to tell him. "You've got to say it five times."

Once Derrick shifted his focus toward the NFL — with the potential to earn millions — Fred shared a personal story from a time before his youngest son was born.

In 1992, Fred was pursuing his master's degree in engineering. In order to have a better career, he had to quit his job to go back to school. Christy, who had three children at home at the time, couldn't work, either. For almost a year, Fred and his family had to live on just $2,000. He took a loan for his education and bought used clothes for his children.

The meal Fred remembers his family eating the most back then was rice and bread.

"My first daughter used to say, 'When are we going to eat meat in this house?'" Fred said. "She was very, very young. I said, 'Don't worry, it will come some day."

In 1993, Fred earned his master's degree. He started a new job soon thereafter and paid back his student loan debt in three years.

"I thank God," Fred said. "It was the worst year. I don't know how we survived, but we did. I remember filling the refrigerator (after that). We had meat."

No matter how much money Derrick makes in his NFL career, his father's story teaches him that what matters most is how well he manages his priorities. Beyond the financial struggles his father once went through, Derrick is most proud that the biggest attribute he learned from his father is perseverance.

"All my siblings are having wonderful lives right now," he said. "It's all thanks to him and my mother being great parents."

Since the draft, the color red has become a dominant one inside Fred's house. He has placed the Chiefs' emblem in several rooms. A Chiefs flag flies in the front yard. Fred is eager to see his son play in his first NFL game.

"This is Chiefs Kingdom," Fred said of his home. "We are very, very happy for Derrick. He's a good kid, but the good kid doesn't just stop. I'm going to continue talking to him."

Fred admits he talks to Derrick these days a bit more often than his older children. The next task he wants his son to focus on is the correct business approach he must have off the field. Everything in camp, Fred tells his son, matters. How are you talking to people? How attentive are you in meetings? If an issues arises, how will you help resolve it?

Derrick hopes his positive attitude and commitment to improve will be noticed by his coaches and older teammates.

"In this business, how I see it, you get what you put in," he said. "If you want to play, you can put in as much as you want to get on the field. If you don't really care about it, you're not going to do as much as studying film, you're not going to care as much when you're on the practice field, you're not going to care about what food you put into your body. You're not going to worry about how much sleep you're getting. It's about how much you really want to get on the field."

When Derrick talks with his mother at night, he can hear her smile and joy on the phone, which at times has made him emotional. His father, though, remains steady.

On Thursday morning, Derrick received his daily text message, the one that's always meant to motivate him.

"Prove yourself every day," Fred wrote to his son. "Have you done your job?"

Chiefs safety Eric Berry: 'I just keep on trucking'

ST. JOSEPH

Sometimes, Eric Berry's mind wanders to the what-ifs.

What if he didn't have two season-ending injuries?

What if he never got cancer?

What if he didn't spend nearly half of his NFL career on the mend?

But before the five-time Pro Bowl safety can escape too far down the rabbit hole of alternate realities, he pauses and remembers the positives that came from those negatives.

"You really can't wonder where you would be," Berry said. "There's no telling. Because I learned so much throughout all three of those processes — including this one — and I just keep growing. I can't really tell you where I would be without them."

Saturday morning, Berry pulled on pads for the first time since he exited the season-opener against New England with a torn Achilles in the fourth quarter.

Right before he went down, Berry felt like he was finally close to peaking. He was in excellent shape and primed for a big season. He had the same feelings in 2011 and 2014 when his seasons were cut short by an ACL tear and a Hodgkin lymphoma diagnosis, respectively.

It would be easy to feel cheated by the cruel timing of those maladies, but Berry doesn't.

"I learned so much," he said. "The whole cancer deal was actually a privilege, to be honest with you. It was a blessing at the same time because I learned so much. I helped so many people and so many people helped me as well and inspired me, just being able to connect with them through that common thread of having cancer and being able to overcome it."

His experience recovering from the ACL tear and the cancer fueled him through his latest rehabilitation, and he tried to follow the same blueprint he used then to get ready for this season.

But at nearly 30 years old, Berry knows his body can't take the physical beating the way it used to. So much of his preparation now is mental. He relies on putting in work in the film room and in walk-throughs instead of banging bodies during extended 11-on-11 scenarios.

"You can't overdo it physically," he said. "You've got to make sure you prepare mentally because you only get a few opportunities on the field to be like, 'OK, this is the situation, this is the down and distance. Let's see if we can make the play or make sure we are perfect on this play, make sure we get it done.' Because you only going to get so many reps on the field where you get a game-like situation."

After three catastrophic setbacks, it would be easy to get discouraged.

But Berry's support network doesn't let that happen. Before Berry departed for training camp, his dad gave him the same advice he's given him during each of his rehabilitation journeys.

"Sometimes I might tend to overthink things at times instead of just doing it," Berry said. "He's always been the person to ground me and keep me humble, and also put things in perspective for me. ... He's always been there to be like, 'Look, just take care of business. And you'll be fine."

Berry's journey isn't lost on his teammates. Entering his ninth year with the organization, Berry is the unquestioned leader of the young group, and his status as the comeback king only builds his legacy in the locker room.

"Eric's our leader," Chiefs coach Andy Reid said. "We appreciate when he's out there going. The guys feed off him. It's the whole story. It's not just that it's Eric Berry, It's the whole story, the whole thing that he went through. The fact that he does everything out here and works his tail off. It's a phenomenal story."

Berry doesn't know what this season will bring. He doesn't know if he has another comeback in his system. But he's not worried about what he can't control.

"I just keep on trucking," Berry said. "I don't know what life is going to throw at me. That's just period. You never know what's going to come your way. However it comes to you or whatever it is, you just roll with the punches and keep pressing forward."

Chiefs broke a trend by drafting Patrick Mahomes, now hope he bucks another

Blair Kerkhoff

Kansas City Star

August 15, 2018

Patrick Mahomes is beginning his role as his franchise's quarterback in a different way than many, and not because of his arm strength, hairstyle or love of his pit bull.

No, this involves other factors, like his scant time under center in the NFL, and suggests that lofty expectations for the second-year pro may be out of whack based on recent history.

But the idea in the short term, as the Chiefs prepare for a season in which a fourth-consecutive playoff appearance is the objective, is that his inexperience will be offset by advantages the Chiefs have created for him. And that those benefits will help Mahomes defy the odds of career success of quarterbacks selected in the first round.

How inexperienced is Mahomes?

When he was selected with the No. 10 overall pick in the 2017 draft, he became the 28th quarterback taken in the first round since 2007. The 29th went three picks later when Houston took Deshaun Watson.

Every one of those quarterbacks played more in his first year than Mahomes.

One, Jamarcus Russell, started only once as a rookie in 2007, the same as Mahomes last year, but he appeared in three other games. Another, Jake Locker in 2011, didn't start as a rookie, but wound up taking more snaps for the season.

So much is expected from someone who has played so little, but that's where we are with the 22-year-old Mahomes, the quarterback Kansas City can call its own and has waited decades to embrace.

"I get it," said former Chiefs quarterback Trent Green. "This is a different situation from what the Chiefs have had."

Green then hit the reverse-chronology button on Chiefs quarterbacks: Alex Smith, Matt Cassell, Damon Huard, Green, Elvis Grbac, Steve Bono, Joe Montana, Steve DeBerg ...

The Chiefs' era of importing quarterbacks began with DeBerg, who arrived in 1988. After that season, Marty Schottenheimer took over and every coach since then started the season with a plan centered around a quarterback who launched his NFL career elsewhere.

Before DeBerg, the previous decade had seen a run of Chiefs-drafted signal callers: Steve Fuller, Bill Kenney and Todd Blackledge. One might call that period the second era of homegrown Chiefs quarterbacks, with Len Dawson and Mike Livingston representing the first.

Mahomes begins the fourth era, and the fact that he and the team are standing at the doorstep of something new and fresh helps explain the fervor around him. It also helps that he's embraced this popularity, endearing himself to fans in the offseason by attending Royals and Sporting KC games and various concerts ... and showing up for a race this spring at Kansas Speedway wearing a pair of jorts.

He's an original Kansas City quarterback, and the organization is banking on offsetting his inexperience with advantages.

Consider this: Many teams drafting quarterbacks in the first round are either filling an immediate need or creating a competitive situation. Also, in many cases, that team is in a state of flux or instability with its coaching staff or front office.

"Most of the first round picks went to teams that weren't very good at the time and maybe an unstable environment," Chiefs coach Andy Reid said. "Then you look and see if it was an offensive (minded) head coach or a defensive coach."

Teams that select a quarterback high in the draft must plot out how to handle the succession plan at the position. Taking a quarterback in the first round usually means drafting a future leader with the intent of replacing an incumbent. But young quarterbacks are often thrown into fire of competition too soon, costing those teams in the win-loss department.

That wasn't the case for the Chiefs when they selected Mahomes. It was never the intent to have him battle Alex Smith in 2017, who was starting his 13th NFL season.

In that way, Mahomes was like Aaron Rodgers, who apprenticed three years behind Brett Farve before becoming the Packers' starter. No first-round quarterback in this century has waited as long as Rodgers to make his starting debut.

In both cases, a young quarterback had the luxury of time through organizational patience. They joined winning teams with veteran quarterbacks, and although it wasn't the job of Smith or Rodgers to groom his successor, the understudies got to observe how successful veterans went about their business.

"It was tremendous amount of value there, with Pat being able to observe Alex," Chiefs offensive coordinator Eric Bieniemy said. "Not just what he did on the field, which was a great deal, but in the classroom and just showing how to be a professional."

The Chiefs are banking on their plan bucking another trend.

Stretching the timeline of quarterbacks selected in the first round to 2000, their batting average in terms of career success is well below .500.

From 2000 to 2017, 48 quarterbacks were selected in the first round. The list starts with Chad Pennington, taken by the Jets in 2000. He was the only quarterback chosen in the first round that year. Michael Vick was the only one the following year.

All of those quarterbacks since 2000 have started at least one game — Mahomes' one game to date is the fewest — and only 19 have posted winning records. Twenty-seven have losing records, and two are even in terms of wins and losses, including Watson, who went 3-3 before last year's season-ending injury with the Texans.

For every Ben Roelisthberger, Phillip Rivers and Matt Ryan, there's a Patrick Ramsey, Kyle Boller or EJ Manuel.

The Cleveland Browns have fared the worst of any franchise in this area. Starting with Tim Couch, the overall top pick in 1999, the Browns have drafted five quarterbacks. Baker Mayfield, taken first in April, is the latest.

The Browns' picks that have played — Couch, Brady Quinn, Brandon Weeden and Johnny Manziel — have a combined record of 34-78 as starters.

Not even being the overall top pick guarantees success. Twelve quarterbacks have been taken first since 2000. Six have winning career records.

"I've wondered that before," Reid said. "How many quarterbacks would have been (more successful) if they were in the right environment?"

The Chiefs believe they have created conditions that will put their young but promising quarterback in a position to succeed, not only with their patience but by surrounding him with players such as tight end Travis Kelce, wide receiver Tyreek Hill, running back Kareem Hunt — all Pro Bowlers — and a key newcomer, wide receiver Sammy Watkins.

"That kind of goes with the stability," Reid said.

The Rams' Jared Goff is an example of someone whose trajectory changed with the conditions. Things couldn't have gone worse in the 2016 top draft pick's rookie season. He lost all seven of his starts that year.

The Rams changed coaches, bringing in Washington offensive coordinator Sean McVay, and Goff's production changed dramatically. He lead his teams to 11 victories and a playoff spot while earning a Pro Bowl selection.

"There are a lot of factors that go into this," Reid said. "You hope for Pat this is the right situation. Then he's got to go out and play. That's what it comes down to."

Good and lucky: How Patrick Mahomes wound up in Kansas City, quarterbacking the Chiefs

Sam Mellinger

Kansas City Star

TYLER, TEXAS

Everything the Chiefs think they can be is dependent on Patrick Mahomes being everything they believe him to be. He is too important to fail, the Chiefs making the grandest single bet in its tortured history without a safety net.

This is a desperate franchise putting its future on a man who only became a full-time football player three years ago, one of the great offensive minds of the 21st century handpicking him for a potential ride to the Hall of Fame, a region of fans attaching their hopes to a viral, no-look passing, record breaking college football freak show — who nearly quit the sport.

Twice.

"Crazy to think about now," Mahomes said. "But it's true."

His story has been told in parts, but always just in parts, a series of snacks without the main course. You probably know some of the outline.

Son of a big-leaguer. Hung out with A-Rod as a kid. Eventually a potential pro himself, then a prolific quarterback at Texas Tech. Then a draft curiosity, then a draft obsession, then the first quarterback taken by the Chiefs in the first round since 1983.

But when a story is done in bits, the details are always left out, which is a shame because the details make the biggest plot line of Kansas City sports' next decade so tantalizing.

Like, did you know football was his third-best sport two years into high school? That he chose it over the others largely because he had so much to learn? That he became so good and so daring so quickly that he and his best friend essentially ad-libbed the playbook, without practice and without asking their high school coach for permission?

That he has a photographic memory, and that teams with Hall of Fame quarterbacks wanted to trade up for a kid who only became a full-time football player two years earlier?

Randi Mahomes always had a four-year plan for her first child, and that plan never included any of this. A dream is now reality, but even that might be misleading because it implies Patrick or anyone around him dreamed it before three years ago.

He is now in a delicate place. When he came to Kansas City, he did not know of the pain and angst of a giant institution in a small market that hasn't won a Super Bowl since before his parents were born.

Those around him deploy mental gymnastics to mesh what they see with the odds. They say the hype is too much, but the general manager calls him the best college player he's ever evaluated. They talk about his need to improve, but the head coach giggles at some of the throws.

Mahomes did not ask for any of this. He is to be not just a star, but a wildly entertaining one — substance and style. Decision makers inside the organization are convinced this is ground zero for a new chapter in one of pro football's historic franchises — there was Before Mahomes, and now there is With Mahomes.

It's an absurd weight. So far, Mahomes' life has been a string of lucky breaks made good through supernatural talent and confidence and work. That's been enough to get him here, but he's never gone against something like this.

"He was meant to do this," said Pat Mahomes, Patrick's father. "You're going to see some stuff this year you've never seen before."

Lucky break No. 1

The first lucky break defined his childhood.

Born to a father who pitched 11 years in the major leagues, dragging him through clubhouses and having him catching fly balls before the World Series at age 5, Patrick's grade-school years served as something like a PhD-level class in how to be an athlete.

"He learned how it works," said LaTroy Hawkins, a retired 21-year major-leaguer and Patrick's godfather. "How to gain those guys' respect, how to deflect credit. Walking the walk. That came at a very young age."

Raised by a single mother whose job as an event coordinator meant loads of nights and weekends, Patrick had to help raise his younger brother and saw an up-close and real-time model for hard work.

"Stable, always there," he said of his mother. "Always there for us. Showed us you have to work hard to get what you want."

Surrounded by a core group of a half-dozen best friends, all sports-obsessed and most eventual college athletes, Mahomes' childhood was in some ways the perfect blueprint for a future in sports. Even now, those guys talk the same, with the same inflections, the same chuckle that begins many sentences, all on the same text thread making fun of each other and asking about Patrick's last highlight.

"I knew he'd be a professional athlete when he was 7," Randi said. "I'm serious. There was never a question to him, and I knew he had the talent."

Soccer, baseball, karate, basketball, ping pong, golf. Patrick was obsessed with all of it, and better than most of his peers, too. He'd watch, study, listen. By age 8 or so, he'd call pitches in the big-league games he watched, and nailed it more times than not. By 10 or so, he could diagnose a golf swing on TV.

Everything was sports. Sports was everything. Once, when Patrick was 4, a teammate of his dad's asked Randi how she got him to play catch so much.

"How do I get him to stop?" she replied.

He was competitive, too. Wanted to throw the farthest. Run the fastest. Make the most shots. Spell the most words correctly. He never cared much about the result of winning. Just the process, the feeling. He'd win a tournament, get home, and hear mom ask about the trophy.

"Oh," he'd say. "I don't know."

Pat and Randi — they separated when Patrick was 6; he and his younger brother lived with mom — can only remember one time Patrick didn't want to play a sport. Pop Warner football. Patrick wanted to play quarterback. Coach put him at linebacker.

Patrick wanted to quit.

Mom and Dad made him finish the season. He did, but it wasn't the last time Patrick wanted to quit football.

Lucky break No. 2

The second lucky break defined Mahomes' adolescence.

It came just after the second time he nearly quit football. We'll get to that story in a second, but let's begin with Mahomes in an incredibly awkward quarterback competition during his junior season at Whitehouse (Texas) High.

The other guy: Patrick's best friend, Ryan Cheatham.

They were both pitchers, too, and damn good ones. When they played together in the summer, Patrick would pitch the semifinal, and Ryan the championship. Patrick stayed at Ryan's house so much he was like family. And now, they faced each other for one of life's great privileges — starting quarterback at an East Texas high school football powerhouse.

"A little awkward," Ryan admitted.

Big, strong, reliable — Ryan did his drop, made his reads. If the throw was there, he made it. If not, he ran forward for a respectable gain.

Patrick never had a private coach in any sport and didn't do 7-on-7 camps. His footwork may be a little loose because of it, even now, but the upshot is that his creativity was never coached out of him. He was a lightning bolt.

"Ryan could've been a (Division I) quarterback, no doubt in my mind," said Adam Cook, Whitehouse's offensive coordinator that year. "He'd do what you needed, and he'd get you those five yards. Well, Pat's trying to take 95 on every play."

The coaches were split between the more gifted Patrick and the more dependable Ryan. Cook made the decision at halftime of the second game. The plan was to rotate Patrick and Ryan, but at halftime Cook changed the plan.

Ryan was heartbroken, and the next week coach and player cried together. But Ryan remained happy for his friend and is still proud the stress never touched their bond.

"Once he started making those big plays," Ryan said, "I was like, 'Yeah, OK. I don't know if I can do that."

Mahomes was a star, and right away. Cook, the offensive coordinator, had walked on at Texas Tech, so Whitehouse ran all the same plays the Red Raiders did. Mahomes' highlight reel from high school looks a lot like what he eventually did in college — just wilder. Two playoff games in a row, he made the same scramble-right, scramble-left, scramble-right-again, chuck-it-60-yards touchdown pass.

College football recruiters were slow to come around. Some didn't know about him. He started late, didn't take part in many camps, wasn't plugged in with a specialty coach — wasn't on what some college coaches call "the circuit."

Mahomes and childhood friend Ryan Cheatham were on-field teammates (and competitive adversaries) for years. They remain friends.

East Tennessee Sports Network screen grab

The coaches who did know worried about wasting their time. Patrick threw baseballs in the mid-90s, with good off-speed stuff. Everyone knew about his dad, too, so do the math. Recruiting classes are often built around quarterbacks.

The risk was real, because even Patrick thought his future was baseball. That's why he nearly quit football before all this happened. Texas was among the schools recruiting him as a safety, a position Patrick only tolerated, so if football brought an injury that compromised his real professional future, what was he doing?

He thought about this a lot before his junior season. Even told his mom he'd made up his mind. That was it. Quitting. No more football. She would've been happier that way. Football always scared her. Still does. But she loves her son, and knows her son, so she told him she didn't see him happy watching his friends play from the stands.

Maybe that's why, six years ago this fall, Patrick decided to give football one more season.

Baseball had one more shot at Patrick, in the draft after his senior year. He told teams he wanted $2.5 million to skip his football scholarship, a number he now calls "ridiculous," something he came up with because he didn't want to say no.

A sample of scouts who watched Mahomes back then projected his talent would be worth anywhere from a second- to third-round pick. That could've been worth up to a $1.6 million bonus, maybe more if Mahomes got the so-called multi-sport bump.

But he was consistent. One scout who talked with him still remembers that Patrick drove the meeting — rare for a high school kid, particularly the son of a big leaguer. The Tigers took him in the 37th round, the scout telling Patrick he just wanted him to be able to say he was drafted, and that he looked forward to talking again in three years.

Patrick wanted to play football, even though at the time he figured he'd go back to baseball. Everyone did. He was a seven-figure baseball talent.

As a football player, he began his college career behind a sophomore starter with an NFL future of his own, third on the depth chart in Lubbock.

The third lucky break defined Mahomes' three years at Texas Tech.

Lots of folks back home didn't understand why Mahomes went to Tech in the first place. Davis Webb was the Red Raiders' starter, good enough that Baker Mayfield transferred away, and just a sophomore. Classically trained, too — 6-foot-5, strong arm, a graduate of the famed Elite 11 camp. He was thought to be one of the Big 12's best quarterbacks when Mahomes signed.

"If those other guys are better, then they should play," Patrick told his father.

Then Webb got hurt. First a shoulder, then an ankle, and once Mahomes played the decision was easy. He threw 16 touchdowns and just four interceptions as a freshman. Webb transferred to Cal, where he was good enough for the New York Giants to take in the third round of the NFL Draft.

The combination of Mahomes' talent, Tech's wide-open offense and, um, wide-open defense made for plays and numbers that look made up. There's the 50-yard, sidearmed flick against his body for a touchdown against Louisiana Tech. The no-look pass in the last 2 minutes of a crucial drive against Oklahoma State. The NCAA-record 819 total yards in a single game against Oklahoma.

It all happened so fast. Mahomes played baseball his freshman year but found himself late to practices and even games because of a football workout, or sometimes just being buried in video.

He'd only been a quarterback for two and a half years, so pro baseball still made the most sense as a future. He was, literally, years behind anyone he was theoretically competing against for an NFL job. Plus, Tech had a lousy track record of producing good pro quarterbacks.

But, dammit. Patrick really loved playing quarterback. When he wanted to quit, it was never about football. It was about playing quarterback. That's what he wanted.

Baseball began to bore him. He's unfailingly polite, so he won't say it that bluntly, but it's the truth. Baseball is routines. It's the same basic matchup — pitcher vs. hitter — over and over and over.

Football is different. Football can be anything. Each play is its own, each defense unique, the math of 11 humans on each side creating infinite possibilities. Patrick's always been a thinker, always been attracted to a challenge.

"Baseball, I felt like I almost already peaked," he said. "I felt like I knew everything about baseball. In football, I'm still learning something every single day."

So, as a college freshman, and less than two years before the Chiefs would use two first-round picks to bet their future on him, Mahomes finally became a full-time football player.

Who does that? Who quits the sport they definitely have a seven-figure future in for the one they might be able to make work? You hear the story and it's easy to see a young man with house money. He can do the unorthodox — in both how he plays quarterback and that he plays quarterback — because he has a million or more from baseball to fall back on.

It's a theory, anyway.

"I see what you're saying," said Coleman Patterson, one of Mahomes' best friends from Tyler and a teammate at Tech. "But I don't think he played fear-free because he had baseball. Honestly, I just don't think he ever thought he'd fail."

Patrick's sophomore season changed everything — 4,653 yards, 36 touchdowns and 63.5 percent accuracy. He led the Big 12 in most passing categories. Scouts swarmed. Wasn't just the obvious, either.

After the Baylor game, Patrick had dinner with his dad. Ran through an interception, everything from what his receivers did to how each defender reacted. It was the linebacker. Patrick lost track of the linebacker.

"But now I've seen it so I know what to do," Pat remembers his son saying.

"I promise you," Pat said at the memory. "He hasn't made that mistake again."

Mahomes left Tech following his junior season, just four months after his 21st birthday. Draft season was bonkers. At first, they projected him for the third round. Then the second. Then late in the first. He went to ESPN and, wearing a shirt and tie, threw a ball over a walkway and into the lap of a dummy on a bench on the other side. Jon Gruden called Patrick his favorite quarterback in the class.

Seventeen teams met with him in person. Leigh Steinberg, Mahomes' agent, cited the Chargers, Giants, Saints, Steelers and Cardinals among those with the heaviest interest.

Which brings us to Patrick's fourth and final lucky break — when the Chiefs traded three picks, including two in the first round, to select him 10th overall so that Patrick could define their future.

Lucky break No. 4

Quarterbacks fail all the time. Some of them simply can't hack it. But good ones fail, too. They fail because they were in the wrong place, with the wrong coach, surrounded by the wrong people. Or, maybe the right coach was fired, and the new coach is the wrong coach.

"I've studied that," Chiefs coach Andy Reid said. "How many quarterbacks could have been if they'd had the right environment?"

Reid is the Chiefs' most powerful football man, one of the league's highest-paid coaches, and now his top priority is making sure Mahomes has the right environment. He's had good quarterbacks before, but never quite like this.

The Chiefs finished fourth in points last year, sixth in yards, and believe speedy receiver Tyreek Hill is not only a perfect fit for Mahomes' arm but getting better overall. They spent $48 million on receiver Sammy Watkins. Tight end Travis Kelce remains in his prime. Running back Kareem Hunt led the league in rushing last year as a rookie.

Kansas City has never seen a quarterback like this. He's the youngest starter in franchise history, with almost certainly the best arm. He sends practice highlights to friends back home over Snapchat. He sits in the front row at Kauffman Stadium, wears a kit to Sporting Kansas City games, and jorts and a sleeveless Kansas City T-Bones jersey to a NASCAR race.

There's a story behind that, too. Gehrig Dieter, the Chiefs receiver and one of Mahomes' closest friends on the team, wore "regular" clothes the year before, and fullback Anthony Sherman wore him out about it. As Mahomes tells it, he's from Texas, so obviously he had jorts and decided to "give Sherm what he wanted."

Is it exaggerating to say no Kansas City athlete has done anything more popular since Eric Hosmer's mad dash home in New York during the 2015 World Series?

"No regrets at all," Mahomes said. "I loved it."

When it comes to sports in KC, Mahomes has become THE man about town, especially now that former Royals stars like Eric Hosmer and Mike Moustakas have moved on.

He is a star, in other words, already the most visible quarterback the Chiefs have had since Len Dawson anchored the 10 o'clock news after practice. At least at the moment, that status is based entire on potential. He's on billboards, his jersey a top seller, all before his first season as a starter.

How often has this much been expected from someone with so little history? The Chiefs chose Mahomes over Deshaun Watson, the former Clemson star who beat Alabama in the last minute for a national championship.

"What makes this difficult is that Deshaun Watson made it look so easy that first year," Steinberg said.

Mahomes' football success, then, depends largely on how quickly he can play catch-up. His physical gifts are obvious, but he's wicked smart, too — the 2016-17 Big 12 Scholar-Athlete of the Year in football, blessed with the type of mind that not only recalls facts from a book, but can remember where the words were on the page.

That's terrifically advantageous now, flashes of film and past snaps scrolling through his mind as he approaches the line of scrimmage.

"I was a good student and stuff like that," Mahomes said. "But this is like my favorite class."

Quarterbacks soar or fail based largely on what they make of adversity, and for all the talk of his inexperience under center, his most glaring inexperience is against obstacles. He just hasn't had many. Throughout the reporting for this story, many of those closest to him — from childhood friends to his parents to Reid — were asked about Mahomes' greatest challenge.

"Oh, Lord, that's a good one," Randi said.

"We never had to face a lot of adversity," Patterson said.

"He hasn't done it yet, so it's uncharted territory," Reid said.

Eventually, they all took guesses. Growing up with a single mom wasn't easy. Pat's history as a big leaguer produced outsized expectations from the jump. Choosing football over baseball wasn't easy, and neither was grinding against his best friend for the job in high school.

So, you can come up with stuff. But nothing like this. Careers and reputations are on the line, from the jobs of assistants to Reid's case for the Hall of Fame to the franchise itself wiping away five decades of postseason failures. The stakes are clear, and unforgiving.

Vague plans are in place to set up scholarships and legacy foundations — first in Tyler, then Lubbock, finally in Kansas City. This is what legends do, and at this tender moment, when Mahomes has neither succeeded nor failed, when he has neither lived up to the hype nor disappointed, two facts are abundantly clear.

Patrick Mahomes, relative quarterback neophyte, the hand-picked replacement for a Pro Bowler who had the season of his life in 2017, needs to be great and appears entirely unbothered by any of it.

"I want to win Super Bowls here," he said.

Plural?

"That's the goal," he said. "I want to be great. I'll put that pressure on myself, so we can do it, so it's not like I feel any pressure from anyone else.

"I love this game. I love working, so being able to come in here every day is enjoying life. People before you have built the foundation, so you have to just go out there and finish it off."

'He only sees the end zone': Tyreek Hill makes everyone on the field around him disappear

Lindsay Jones

The Athletic

September 10, 2018

CARSON, Calif. — Tyreek Hill stood just a few yards outside of his own end zone, stared up at the rapidly descending punt, and everyone around him seemed to disappear.

"Once I caught it, I was like, 'Man, this is wide open,'" Hill said.

When you're as fast as Hill, the Kansas City Chiefs' speedy wide receiver and punt returner, wide open has a different meaning. To get from the 9-yard line on the west sideline to the east corner of the far end zone, 91 yards away, Hill had to outrun the first Chargers' coverageman (cornerback Craig Maker) and race laterally along the 10-yard line to the opposite hashmark before turning right to sprint down the far sideline. Once Hill made his turn, he had only the Chargers' long snapper and punter to beat.

That Hill scored untouched was a credit to his blazing speed, and maybe gives credence to a teammate's theory about him: That when Hill has the ball in his hands, it's as if no other players on the field exist.

"It's like everyone is invisible," Chiefs receiver and fellow kick returner De'Anthony Thomas told The Athletic. "To him, he only sees the end zone."

And on Sunday, after reaching the end zone, Hill also saw no need to stop. So as he charged across the white C of the Chargers' name in the end zone, Hill kept on running, Forrest Gump style, up the ramp and toward the locker room. That's because, as any elite sprinter would tell you, it's dangerous to just slam on the breaks.

Somehow, Hill's speed seemed to stun the Chargers. But it shouldn't have. Since Hill's arrival in Kansas City in 2016, he's electrified the Chiefs offense and special teams units, and after Sunday's punt return touchdown and 58-yard touchdown reception from Patrick Mahomes, he now has 13 career touchdowns of at least 50 yards. Just two players in NFL history, Hall of Famer Gale Sayers and former Bears returner Devin Hester, have that many 50-plus yard scores in their first 35 games.

Hill also added a third touchdown Sunday with a 1-yard catch in the fourth quarter. He celebrated the hat trick by performing a standing back flip in the end zone.

"I had to show my athletic ability," Hill said.

Yes, Tyreek, we get it. You're an athletic freak.

What's quickly becoming clear is that even with a new starting quarterback in Patrick Mahomes — or perhaps even because of the arrival of the big-armed Mahomes — Hill is even more ingrained as the Chiefs' most dangerous weapon. On Sunday in the Chiefs' 38-28 win against the Chargers, Hill made it so the tight end Travis Kelce, running back Kareem Hunt and receiver Sammy Watkins were non-factors.

That certainly won't always be the case, and those other three players are far too talented to stay off the stat sheet for long, but Hill continues to prove that he should be in the discussion as one the league's best receivers, not just its quickest.

"Tyreek's really worked on his route running and everything in order to make himself the best wide receiver in the league," Mahomes said. "I think today has showed that he has improved in his part, and has the speed to bring it anytime."

(Laurent Duvernay-Tardif)

Laurent Duvernay-Tardif, M.D.: How the Chiefs Guard Earned His Medical Degree While Protecting His QB

Ben Baskin

September 11, 2018

The doctor pulls a white Ford Fiesta across traffic and into the parking lot of a vacant store, calculating his options. The metered area is a bit of a trek, and this space is directly across the street from the hospital, which should save him at least 10 minutes, coming and going. And since the store isn't open, he figures, no one should care that he's violating the Customers Only signs.

"You have to balance it," says Laurent Duvernay-Tardif, who keeps a mental record of how often he gets ticketed—so far this month, only once—and how much time he'll save by taking the risk. Then he grabs a notepad and a half-dozen bakery bags and hurries across the street to his 2:30 meeting.

As he approaches the building, Duvernay-Tardif realizes he has a couple of minutes to spare, a rare luxury. So he walks into a nearby Dollarama in search of deodorant. Back on the street, he lifts his shirt and applies it in quick strokes, then he enters the Department of Family Medicine and rides the elevator to the third floor.

It is mid-July in Montreal, two months after Duvernay-Tardif graduated from medical school and less than a week before he must return to Kansas City to begin his fifth NFL training camp. Ever since the Chiefs drafted him in 2014, he's had to balance these two demanding careers. Yet becoming the first active NFL player to be a licensed M.D. was only the beginning. The question he hopes will be answered during today's meeting is: What's next?

An assistant ushers Duvernay-Tardif into a glass-walled waiting room, where he squeezes his 6' 5", 321-pound frame into a narrow cloth chair. He's told that the two doctors—one, the department chair; the other, in charge of the postgraduate program—will be with him shortly. The six bags of bread and assorted goodies that he brought over from his parents' bakery, where he helped knead dough earlier in the day, are placed on the table. He plans to pass them around the office. "You make more friends when you give out pastries," he says in mellifluous English accented by his native French. His way of speaking, paired with his immaculately groomed beard and academic mien, makes it seem as if he's always doing something important.

As he waits, Duvernay-Tardif tries to recall the details of his NFL contract and begins to enumerate his various residency options, attempting to untangle their potential conflicts and accompanying unknowns. At 27, he doesn't know how long his career as a right guard will last—or how long he wants it to. He understands the dangers of the sport all too well, and he's constantly asking himself if it's still worth it to play.

When he disrupted his medical school studies four years ago, Duvernay-Tardif faced long odds to make it onto an NFL roster from a Canadian university. He never considered the possibility that, once he graduated, he'd be a mainstay on a Super Bowl contender in the midst of a five-year, $42.4 million contract. But now he worries that he'll have to wait until his NFL career is over to begin his residency. By then, he fears he'll have forgotten everything he learned in med school.

The assistant returns and escorts Duvernay-Tardif down the hallway. He turns a corner, enters an office and closes the door behind him.

Laurent Duvernay-Tardif has always been comfortable in the unknown. When he was 12, his family embarked on a yearlong sailing trip, their 30-foot boat going up the St. Lawrence River from Montreal and then traveling down the East Coast—Boston, New York, Delaware Bay, Chesapeake Bay, Miami—before eventually taking the Gulf Stream to Turks and Caicos and the 700 islands of the Bahamas.

It was a voyage that had been two decades in the making, ever since Laurent's father, François Tardif, had mentioned the dream on his first date with Guylaine Duvernay, over coffee and tea. In 2003, with three kids and no sailing experience to speak of, François quit his job teaching agriculture and put to sea. Their youngest, eight-month-old Marilou, took her first steps on the boat, in the circumambient waters of the Atlantic Ocean.

"You can have so many dreams," François says. "But they don't mean anything if you don't do them."

Laurent, their eldest, steered the boat, interpreted tide charts and monitored the radar. They ate only what they caught, so Laurent would put on a wetsuit, fill his belt with lead to sink in the water, grab a scuba mask and spend four hours a day searching for grouper and tuna, teaching himself to spearfish. If he threw the spear too hard, it would go through the fish entirely and he'd lose the weapon; too soft and the fish swam on, taking the spear with it. Laurent quickly realized the importance of tide direction—fish blood flowing toward deeper waters could attract unwanted visitors. "Learned that after seeing a few 15-foot-long sharks," he says.

The children were homeschooled on the boat, with Dad handling the sciences and Mom the humanities. Sometimes they'd dock at an island for a day and the kids would be dropped off at a school where no one spoke French, just for the experience. On the beach, they'd collect palm tree branches, build a fire and grill what they had caught. At night they returned to the boat, where Laurent would open a latch in the cockpit and sleep in a box not much bigger than he was.

Three years later they set sail again, a reprise of the first trip. Shortly after they returned, Laurent's paternal grandfather passed away. Guy Tardif had been an intellectual, a professor, a politician, an entrepreneur. He received a master's in criminology, lectured at the University of Montreal, did research for the Quebec Ministry of Justice, published articles on the penitentiary system and prison reform, and was elected as a minister of Quebec—running the departments of consumer affairs, planning and housing, and transport. "And he could hold a hammer and do electricity, too," Francois says. In the late 1970s and early '80s, Guy worked in the government of René Lévesque, the founder of the Parti Quebecois. After serving for nine years—and narrowly failing to achieve the party's goal of winning Quebec its sovereignty—Guy left politics and bought a cornfield on the south shore outside Montreal. With no training, he spent years planting grape vines and apple trees; soon his winery-orchard became locally renown.

After his father died, François sold the winery and spent three months in France studying culinary arts. When he got back home, he and Guylaine opened a bakery in Mont-Saint-Hilaire, an hour east of Montreal. They called it Le Pain dans les Voiles, Bread in the Sails, and in 2011 they won second place at a world bread competition in France. "We are independent," François says. "Do you see that?"

Laurent has always embraced the family ethos. When he was 13 he planted basil, collected it in the fall, made bottles of pesto and sold them at farms. A year later, after watching a YouTube video, he bought 100 day-old chickens, built an enclosure, raised them, slaughtered the 70 that survived, calculated his costs and sold the poultry for $6 a pound.

Wanting money to vacation in Italy after his freshman year of college, Duvernay-Tardif made, bottled and sold fruit jam and caramel in his parents' bakery. He and his new girlfriend, Flo Dubé-Moreau, were able to travel for a month. During his first season in the NFL, Duvernay-Tardif taught himself woodworking and built Flo a desk out of pinewood. Last February, just weeks after the Chiefs lost in the first round of the playoffs, he fulfilled a lifelong dream of going to the Olympics—but he wasn't a spectator in PyeongChang. Instead, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation hired him to report, write and produce 15 stories on the intersection of sports and science. "He needs to push his limits," Flo says. "That's really central, the core of who Laurent is."

Duvernay-Tardif began playing football when he was 14, but only because he'd gotten too big for hockey and a friend's mother suggested he give it a try. He had never watched the sport before, knew nothing about it and quickly learned that he wasn't very good. But he enjoyed the cerebral aspects of the game—the physics, the angles, the strategy—and played for his city's team. His grades in high school were exemplary and earned him entrance to a CEGEP—a two-year program in Quebec that essentially combines senior year of high school with a focused undergraduate study. By then he had already decided on a life in medicine.

There are four medical schools in Quebec, three French-speaking and one English. Because he entered the wrong date on his calendar, Duvernay-Tardif missed the entrance exam for the French schools and was forced to attend McGill. At the time his English was halting. When he first got to the school he had to watch recordings of his classes at half speed while flipping through a pocket dictionary just to keep up. On the advice of guidance counselors, he didn't initially join the football team in order to focus on his studies.

Away from the sport, he felt restive. His mind raced. His grades suffered. "I realized then I need football in my life to balance it," he says. "If I stop one or the other, I am done." A desultory month passed before he joined the team. He became a backup defensive lineman while also taking 30 hours of classes a week and dissecting cadavers. "You get there late at night, alone, 50 dead bodies on tables, it was a little creepy," Duvernay-Tardif says.

At the start of his sophomore year the team needed more offensive linemen and Duvernay-Tardif was asked to switch positions. He proved a natural. During his first practice Matthieu Quiviger, the team's Oline coach and a former first-round pick in the CFL, told Duvernay-Tardif that he had a chance of playing in the NFL. Others on the staff laughed. "When the midget league coach saw Gretzky on the ice for the first time," Quiviger says, "I'm sure he knew he had something special, too."

In his final two years at McGill, Duvernay-Tardif worked upward of 70 hours a week in the hospital, doing a different rotation every few months—family medicine, internal medicine, emergency, psychiatric, pediatric, surgery, ophthalmology. During the season, he selected a different day each week that he was able to attend practice. Sometimes he'd work the night shift at the hospital and sleep on the locker room floor afterward, scrubs still on, his head resting on a pile of pillows, until the team's 6 a.m. meeting. With no time for meals at the hospital, Duvernay-Tardif would stuff his pockets with hard-boiled eggs and crack them open against the elevator door on his way to see patients. Or he'd take Ziploc bags filled with protein powder, add water and squeeze the concoction directly into his mouth.

Anytime Duvernay-Tardif encountered a challenging case—a patient needing water drained from his lungs, or one with pneumonia needing her vocal cords temporarily paralyzed in order to shove a tube down her larynx—he would invariably stay after his shift to witness the technique or procedure. When he finally left the hospital, the sky dark and his teammates asleep, he'd take off his scrubs and head to the gym to train.

He won McGill's Champions Award for combining athletic prowess with academic excellence, maintaining a GPA near 4.0, and also the J.P. Metras Trophy for being the most outstanding collegiate lineman in Canada. "He improved so fast," Quiviger says. "Dominated people so badly." Heading into his fourth season, Laurent realized there was a chance, albeit slim, that he could become the 10th Canadian university player ever drafted into the NFL. He wouldn't have been a Duvernay-Tardif had he passed up the opportunity.

In the winter of 2014, Duvernay-Tardif took four months off from medical school and stayed with trainer Charles Petrone in Knoxville, Tenn., working out at his Wood Gym with a small group of NFL hopefuls. There, Duvernay-Tardif prepared crepes for the house; slow-cooked a beef stew; baked a delectable cheesecake; studied his medical books; dominated everyone in Ping-Pong; chastised other players for not putting away their dishes; and displayed his vast but raw potential in the gym.

"He's a renaissance man," Petrone says. "I was like, Jesus, Laurent, what can't you do?"

Not invited to the NFL combine in Indianapolis, Duvernay-Tardif hosted his own pro day at a soccer stadium in Montreal; nine teams showed up and watched him broad-jump 9' 6" (which would have ranked second among O-linemen at Indy), run the 40 in 4.94 (fourth), bench press 225 pounds 33 times (seventh) and post a 31 1/2" vertical (third). NFL interest began percolating, even though Duvernay-Tardif was still in medical school. He brought a packed suitcase to the hospital every day so he could hop on a flight when teams called, beckoning him for a predraft visit. At one point the offensive line coach from the Eagles pinged him for a Skype session, which he took in a bathroom stall during a break from seeing patients.

Duvernay-Tardif had watched only a handful of NFL games—he bought his first TV after getting to the league and still doesn't have cable—and his knowledge of the sport didn't extend far beyond Tom Brady's name. His agent and best friend, Sasha Ghavami, would send him Word documents containing the most basic information—the coach of the team he was visiting, its star players—that Duvernay-Tardif would study on the flights.

On the second night of the draft Duvernay-Tardif didn't show up to the house party that Ghavami hosted in his honor: He'd had a chance to scrub in during an emergency C-section, for twins no less.

Chiefs coach Andy Reid and general manager John Dorsey called the following day, informing Duvernay-Tardif that they were taking him in the sixth round. The team needed him in Kansas City the next day; Duvernay-Tardif had a pediatrics exam the next week. He was able to reschedule the test, establishing the blueprint that would allow him to spread his final year of medical school out over four NFL offseasons.

That was the easy part. Now Duvernay-Tardif had to learn what amounted to a new sport. Canadian football is played with 12 men, three downs, wider fields and unlimited forward motion. Because the defensive line is required to play a yard off the ball, the footwork for offensive linemen is fundamentally different. And, of course, there were cultural adjustments to be made for a player who had practiced just once a week for the past two years. His position coach in K.C. would say things in meetings like, "O.K., if we are in a backed-up situation, this is what . . . " and Duvernay-Tardif would raise his hand and ask, "What is the definition of backed-up?" Or, "This play is in the draw family . . . " and a confused Duvernay-Tardif would say, "Draw family?" He was so lost by the end of his first training camp that Reid asked him if he had ever played football before.

Duvernay-Tardif made the final roster, asking teammates to call him Larry because he was tired of them butchering Laurent, but he didn't suit up for a single game that season. He had to learn not only whom to block, but also how. He spent practices off to the side working on basic footwork, repeating the steps over and over. He also watched film for the first time, breaking down technique and taking notes just as he would in medical school. Often he would take a piece of paper and scribble a half dozen lines of scrimmage on it, drawing different defensive fronts because he didn't understand the difference between a base look and a sub look. He had to learn concepts like safety rotation and acronyms like EMOL (end man on the line of scrimmage).

At the end of the season, the same day that he had his exit meeting with the team's coaches, he drove back to Montreal, 24 hours straight, and switched lives. His shift in the psychiatric hospital was waiting. To transition, he spent the ride listening to erudite podcasts: Freakonomics Radio, The Economist and Aujourd'hui l'histoire, a French program that details the life of historical figures. "The hardest thing every year," he says, "is to go from being a football player to being a medical student."

After two months in psychiatry, followed by a month each in gynecology and obstetrics, Duvernay-Tardif returned to Kansas City for his second season and quickly earned the starting right guard job. He hasn't relinquished it since, becoming one of the best blockers on one of the league's best lines. And his ability to get out in space and take on second-level defenders has proved to be an integral component in Reid's multifaceted running game.

As he ascended on the field, Duvernay-Tardif was still heading back to Montreal every offseason to continue his studies—internal and emergency medicine after his second season, geriatrics after his third. It was then that Kansas City made him the fourth-highest-paid guard in the league, and something of a celebrity back in Quebec. "But," Duvernay-Tardif says, "in geriatrics everybody is too old to recognize you."

This past offseason, with classes finished and just the final exam left, he traded a bloody, game-worn Chiefs jersey to Quiviger for the use of his old coach's cabin deep in the Val-Morin woods, 60 miles northwest of Montreal. For three weeks he woke up at six in the morning, flipped through a four-inchthick binder stuffed with some 1,300 pages of notes, did ladder work with elastic bands in the kitchen, kettlebell lifts and medicine-ball throws outside in the snow, and then stopped to watch the sun set beyond the mountains. He passed the test on May 8, graduated from medical school on May 29, and was at Chiefs practice the next day.

In the third-floor office of the Department of Family Medicine, Duvernay-Tardif and the two doctors attempt to put together a plan. The group decides that his best course is to enroll in the two-year family medicine program, since it will allow him the most flexibility. After he finishes, he'll be a primary-care physician, able to start his own practice. If he wants to then add a year of emergency or sports medicine specialization, he'll have that option, too.

There are still several variables though. Most of family medicine focuses on "continuity of care," meaning a doctor must treat the same patients consistently over an extended period of time; right now, Duvernay-Tardif is only able to work three or four months a year. But the doctors say the department would be willing to condense the eight months of "off service" work that do not require continuity of care—pretty much the standard hospital rotations that he did in medical school—over three NFL offseasons. Once complete, Duvernay-Tardif would have to become a full-time resident, effectively capping his football career.

More variables. Duvernay-Tardif wants to ensure that he'll be able to honor the contract he signed with the Chiefs, which runs through 2022, with guaranteed money fully paid out in '20. The doctors inform him that he can wait up to four years before he is required to begin the residency program. But once he starts, he has only four years to finish it. He makes calculations—the years left on his deal, the odds that he might get cut early.

Once his current deal is up Duvernay-Tardif will have played nine years in the league—a long, distinguished career, he notes. Still, he doesn't want to rule out the possibility of signing another contract. But the longer he stays in the game, the less medical school knowledge he will retain. Frequently he says that the most important factor in all of this is being a competent and well-respected physician once he retires from football.

An hour later, the three men exit the room; the department chair tells Duvernay-Tardif that he wants tickets to the Super Bowl should the Chiefs make it this year. Duvernay-Tardif laughs as he passes out the bags of pastries. But he doesn't linger for too long; he still has a workout to fit in tonight.

There is still much to debate and decide, but he feels encouraged. Will it be difficult? Of course. Impossible? That's not a word the Duvernay-Tardif clan uses. For the past 5½ years, Duvernay-Tardif explains, his father has been building a 40-foot sailboat, by hand, in the family's front yard, using plywood and epoxy, melting two tons of lead and pouring it into a sand mold to make the keel. Next week, Francois will take the boat out onto the water for the first time. At one point that may have seemed impossible, too.

There is another factor in Duvernay-Tardif's decision, of course, and that is the rather paradoxical concept of a healer playing football. He doesn't deny or downplay the dangers of the sport, but he believes the league has taken positive measures to address the issue of head trauma. When he's told that there's only so much you can do to make an inherently violent game safer, he doesn't disagree. Instead, he says that every time he sustains an injury—a left MCL sprain in 2017, a concussion the year before and another last month—he asks himself if it is still worth it. And every time, the answer has been yes.

He has opportunities now—conversations with NFLPA doctors, the possibility of opening his own clinic and sitting on various boards—that wouldn't have been possible four years ago. When he transitions to medicine full-time, he believes his profile as an NFL star will allow him to be more beneficial to society. "When I say it's worth it," Duvernay-Tardif says, "it's all of that."

He crosses the street and unlocks the car, placing his notebook in the backseat while searching for his workout clothes. As he sits behind the wheel, he enters an address into his phone's GPS to figure out how he can best get to where he is going next. He checks his rearview mirror and then looks toward the horizon. The road is open, the destination known. And on the dashboard, there is no ticket.

For hometown hero Xavier Williams, family played an important role in him achieving his dream

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Xavier Williams walked into the cafeteria at Central Middle School with 10 of his new teammates. Awaiting the Chiefs players on Tuesday afternoon was a large group of teachers, tutors and students. As expected, the students emitted sounds of shock and wonder before they applauded the players, who were visiting on their designated day off.

Williams, wearing his red No. 98 Chiefs jersey, responded to the students' cheers and excitement by flashing his wide, welcoming smile, one that is accentuated by a slight gap between his two front teeth.

The event, which focused on the significance of education, was the first of the players' social-justice initiatives for this season. Each player sat at a round table with students to talk about school, career goals and, most importantly, dreams. Together, the players and students created vision boards to show the students' interests and motivations.

Williams sat with five students, all of whom had the typical, quick-release questions for someone 6-foot-2 and 309 pounds. How much do you bench? How fast can you run? How much do you squat?

"It's almost like going to the (NFL) combine all over again," Williams said while smiling.

While shifting the conversation back to the activity, Williams felt nostalgic as he handed out various magazines for each student to cut out certain images or words that inspired them. Williams did such an exercise when he was young, even before he attended Grandview (Mo.) High, before he learned lessons from his older brother, before he conquered the odds he knows the students are facing.

As the students asked more questions, Williams shared one reason he wanted to spend time with them. He too was born and raised in the Kansas City area. The fact surprised the students. Along with the 10 players Tuesday, everyone in the Chiefs' organization understands Williams can best relate to children and students in the city whenever the team does community events.

Williams, a defensive tackle who signed a free-agent deal with the Chiefs in March, will make his hometown debut at Arrowhead Stadium on Sunday when the team hosts the 49ers. The game will serve as a monumental, lifelong experience for Williams.

"I've been in the same shoes," he said of the students. "It's just something that hits really close to home with me."

As the students flipped through the magazines, Williams listed the objectives he wanted each of them to accomplish. He wanted them to attend a college and graduate. He wanted them to live in a nice home when they become adults. He wanted them to love people.

Above all, Williams wanted to see each student's vision board show their dream job.

Earlier this year, before the Chiefs began training camp, Williams got into a car with Ursula Copeland, his mother. With Copeland driving, Williams looked through the passenger-seat window at his hometown.

The mother and her youngest child had made such a drive before in Williams' four-year NFL career. Each time, though, Williams noticed something new about his city. He marveled at the ongoing improvements of the city's downtown area. The trips always remind him of his childhood.

"I see signs for Gates," Williams said of his favorite barbecue restaurant. "That's huge to me. My Mom still lives in the same place we grew up. It's great to get reminded of where you're from."

A few times, Copeland has driven through the landmarks in Grandview, a community south of the city. The car usually went past the fields where Williams, 26, began playing football.

In his childhood, Williams followed Kristen Hardaway and Rodrick Williams, his older siblings. Copeland, a single mother, taught her children every sport she could to keep them occupied and energetic. All three children played in the South Suburban Junior Football Association. Everyone in the league labeled Williams the same way: Kristen's or Rodrick's little brother.

"Kristen is actually, I think, the best athlete in the family," said Andy Leech, who coached all three players at Grandview High. "She was incredible. She was our best offensive lineman her freshman year. She dominated."

Rodrick said he and his brother Xavier had an advantage over other players in their league. Kristen beat and bullied them for about a decade. As a high school freshman, Hardaway was a guard who finished the season as a starter for the junior-varsity team. While she didn't keep playing for Grandview High, Hardaway continued her career as a linebacker for the San Antonio Regulatorsof the semi-professional Independent Women's Football League.

Each of Copeland's children received her genetic gifts. As a star track athlete, Copeland loved football so much that she played quarterback for the Crunch, a Kansas City women's team, with her children in the stands.

"Her standards for her kids were about as high as any parent we've ever been around," said Leech, now an assistant principal at Martin City Middle School, of Copeland. "She made sure that everybody around her kids was accountable. She had a bit of swagger to her. She's a really cool lady, and her three unbelievable kids really stem from her."

Williams played for the Chiefs in the South Suburban league. Instead of wanting to score touchdowns on offense, Williams was influenced by his older brother to be a defensive player. At home, Xavier and Rodrick watched NFL Films videos of prominent players in the 1990s. Derrick Thomas, the Hall of Fame outside linebacker for the Chiefs, was featured in many of those VHS tapes.

"You don't understand; he loves Derrick Thomas," Rodrick said of Williams. "If you ask him who's the best linebacker or the best football player of all time, he's going to say Derrick Thomas."

From those tapes, Williams watched how Thomas showed a variety of moves to beat the best tackles in the league and garner sacks. One time, Williams told his older brother he was going to do one of those moves in his youth game to collect a sack, too. From that moment, Rodrick knew that Williams' ability to comprehend the sport was at an advanced level. Despite their different defensive positions, Williams replicated Thomas' moves and became a sack machine.

In one joint practice, Williams and Rodrick were able to meet former Chiefs such as Tony Gonzalez, Tony Richardson and Priest Holmes.

"You've got three goats there," Rodrick said, "and this dude is still sitting here thinking, 'Man, you'll play for the same team that Derrick Thomas played for.'"

Xavier went to plenty of Chiefs game with his family. He and Rodrick envisioned themselves on the field at Arrowhead Stadium. Similar to many Chiefs fans, they hated the Broncos and the Raiders. The game Williams remembers most, because of the electric atmosphere, was in the 2007 season, a game the Chiefs lost to the Raiders.

"I don't think either one of the teams that year was having a very good season," said Williams, who at the time was a freshman at Grandview High. "But when that game came around, nobody cared. It was cranked up to the max. That was my all-time favorite."

In high school, Rodrick wanted to be a quarterback or running back for the Grandview Bulldogs. The coaching staff, however, asked him to switch to the offensive line to add depth as his body developed.

As a sophomore, Rodrick wasn't expecting to be a starting tackle. His friend, senior Marlon Jackson, was ahead of him on the depth chart. But in the Bulldogs' preseason jamboree, Jackson tore his ACL. Rodrick, to his surprise, started the season as the starting left tackle. The team's quarterback: Josh Freeman, who went on to star at Kansas State and played seven seasons in the NFL.

"Even I understood a quarterback's blind side is his most vulnerable," Rodrick said. "You've got this 16-year-old kid who has never played the position before, but sure enough, they left me at left tackle. That year was the defining moment in my progression as a player, and it was the year I fell in love with playing on the offensive line."

Rodrick's growth spurt increased his frame to 6-foot-2 and 250 pounds. As a dominant duo, Rodrick and Freeman led the Bulldogs deep in the Missouri state playoffs. Leech admired Rodrick for his aggressiveness and outspoken leadership in the locker room.

"A natural athlete who was really, really smart," said Leech, who then was Grandview's offensive line coach. "He was amazing."

Rodrick wanted to prove to college recruiters that Kansas City could produce a talented offensive lineman. While many Division I schools noticed his skills, Rodrick said he cost himself scholarship opportunities because he was an egotistical hothead. He arrived at Northwest Missouri State, a Division II powerhouse, in 2008 and began to realize the impact of his decisions during his redshirt season.

Throughout his high school career, Xavier, who is two years younger, got to watch his older brother play.

"In retrospect, it was the biggest blessing that could have happened," Rodrick said of playing at Northwest Missouri State. "My Mom had been telling me my entire life, 'Your brother looks up to you.' That's one of the main reasons I stopped doing knucklehead things. You get out to the real world and you understand that you are a reflection of your family."

In 2008, Leech watched Xavier have his breakout season as the Bulldogs' newest leader. But Williams led the team differently compared to his brother. With Leech, then the offensive coordinator, as his mentor, Williams proved to be a calm worker who set the example for his teammates as a captain. With Steven Brittingham as his defensive line coach, Williams disrupted opponents with his speed, technique and toughness.

The following year, Xavier watched brother Rodrick and the Bearcats win the NCAA Division II national championship. In his college career, Rodrick was named a two-time All-American, which earned some attention from NFL scouts and a tryout with the Chiefs in April 2013. He also got to play at Arrowhead Stadium four times in the Bearcats' annual rivalry game against Pittsburg State.

"Sophomore year was the first year I started at Northwest," said Rodrick, who felt goosebumps retelling the story. "I called everybody. As a Kansas City kid, playing in Arrowhead is the pinnacle."

After his unsuccessful NFL tryouts, Rodrick drove up to Cedar Falls, Iowa, with Copeland later that year for Xavier's spring game as a member of the Northern Iowa Panthers. Rodrick felt goosebumps again watching Xavier, a junior, dominate the line of scrimmage. He turned to his mother and asked one question: "When did X become a man?"

As a senior in 2014, Xavier was a first-team All-American who was a finalist for the Buck Buchanan Award, given to the top defensive player in the NCAA football championship subdivision. He collected a career-high 93 tackles, eight sacks and 14 tackles for loss.

"I was just watching like, 'Yo, this kid can flat-out ball,'" Rodrick said. "It wasn't even, 'Oh, that's my little brother.' It was just the realization that my little brother wasn't my little brother anymore."

Rodrick knew the culmination of their football odyssey could be Williams landing in the NFL.

The entire family watched the 2015 NFL Draft together in Copeland's home. Although Williams wasn't selected, soon after he got a phone call from Cardinals coach Bruce Arians, who offered him the opportunity to make the team's roster as an undrafted free agent. Rodrick watched the moment with pride.

"He had that big, cheesy grin, the signature gap [in his teeth]," Rodrick said. "I couldn't have been happier to see somebody you love accomplish their dream. To have my brother go that extra step, it's surreal."

Xavier's play and production increased during his three-year progression with Cardinals. But he always kept his mind on the Chiefs, and would often text about the team with his brother.

In March, as the NFL's free agency period began, Xavier came to Kansas City without telling many people. Rodrick learned of Xavier's arrival from Copeland. Rodrick knew nobody in their family was getting married and no holiday or event was upcoming. He exchanged text messages with his brother. On March 21, young Xavier told his brother he was coming home.

"A lot of guys grow up dreaming about whoever their childhood team was and getting a chance to play," Williams said. "Only a few guys get an opportunity to play in the NFL. Even still, rarely do they get an opportunity to really come home and enjoy home-cooked meals with seeing all the family. It's amazing."

Earlier this month, Williams arrived at the Grandview city hall for a ceremony. Mayor Leonard Jones, after months of corresponding, honored Williams with a proclamation that declared last Sunday to be "Xavier Williams Day" in Grandview, the day the Chiefs defeated the Steelers.

Jones, who became the mayor in 2014, wanted to celebrate and recognize Williams for his positive impact.

Before the event, the men talked in Jones' large office. Williams expressed his desire to continue to give back to the community. Jones heard Williams' stories of growing up in Grandview, what he learned from his teachers and coaches and how he was grateful for everyone, including his brother, who led him. Both men agreed to talk again later this year about how they could help produce more success stories for the next generation of students.

When the proclamation began, Williams was greeted by Leech, former coaches and teachers and Kenny Rodreguez, the school district's superintendent.

"That tells you a lot," Jones said. "If your upbringing was not one that was good, and the character wasn't one that you want to pass on to somebody else, you're not going to have old coaches or the superintendent coming back to say they remember this individual."

Jones called Williams a mentor. In the past, Jones said the same about Freeman and Alec Burks, a shooting guard for the Utah Jazz and a former Grandview standout. Yet what impressed Jones was Williams' humility.

Williams was comfortable signing his autograph on a red Chiefs jersey for Jones, which will be displayed in city hall next to jerseys from Freeman and Burks. He smiled throughout the event.

"Wow," he told Jones. "I'm still shocked that you guys are willing to do this."

Since he became a Chief, Williams has been one of the most active players in the city.

In May, he spoke and was a judge at the annual Harry's Hay Day parade to celebrate President Harry S. Truman's birthday and legacy. He spent time and learned from Kansas City firefighters. He went through almost every practice in training camp reconnecting with someone from his childhood. He has visited Grandview High numerous times.

"Just to know who he is is more important than what he does on the field," Jones said. "That's the key. We are more pleased with the fact that Xavier has graduated from Grandview High School and who he has become."

During his time coaching at Grandview High, Leech led the Bulldogs' track and field teams to multiple state championships. One of Leech's track athletes coined Grandview as "Dreamview," the place where greatness could occur more often than many assumed.

Leech loved that. He enjoyed the thought even more when he saw Williams do workout sessions with the school's football players in July. Whether at practices or before games, Williams has been a steady voice for the Bulldogs this season.

"We're able to point to those guys and say it's not a fairytale. It happens," Leech said of Williams, Freeman and Burks. "That's the greatest thing about high school sports. You don't know what they're going to become. You know what their potential is, and you want them to reach that potential in believing in them and getting them to believe in themselves."

In training with the Bulldogs this summer, Williams learned from the coaching staff that the team could use an additional coach, someone who could be another connector through communication and experience. Williams gave his brother's phone number to coach Jeremie Picard.

As a rookie assistant coach, Rodrick has been his alma mater's offensive line coach.

"My brother is the reason why I'm coaching," said Rodrick, who works at symplr, a medical software company. "His maturation and the way he goes about using his platform to affect other people has inspired the community. He told me, 'Rod, you've had too much success in football and you know too much about the game to not be coaching."

Next up for the brothers is fulfilling a dream they began discussing a few months ago. The brothers hope to host a citywide camp for linemen, offensive and defensive, next year, and they want the camp to be held at Grandview High.

"We're both young, black men from Kansas City," Rodrick said. "We want to speak to those same young, black men and show them that this game can take you to heights unknown."

With Williams by their side, three students from his table showed and explained their aspirations. One student, a boy, cut out and pasted images of basketball players with the hopes of being an accomplished player one day. Another student, a girl, took a page out of "Sports Illustrated" that featured outside linebacker Justin Houston. She also cut and pasted images of celebrities because of how different the glamorous women looked. She wrote on her vision board in pink marker that she hopes to become a cosmetologist.

Many people for weeks — including the students from the event — have asked Williams how he will feel living out his dream of playing at Arrowhead Stadium on Sunday. Williams anticipates that he will become emotional when he hears the roars from the expected sellout crowd.

"When you come out of that tunnel, and it's red and it's loud. It's a beautiful thing," coach Andy Reid said. "I know the people in Kansas City love getting in [the stadium] and doing that [for the players]. We look forward to it."

Williams said he will experience the moment with every important person in his life.

Leech will watch the game from the TV in his home. He plans to keep his eyes on Williams and the battles at the line of scrimmage, where he believes football games are decided. Copeland will watch her son from the stands with Williams' 3-year-old daughter, Phoenix, along with his girlfriend, her daughter and her older son.

Rodrick knows his brother will be nervous, anxious and elated, all the same emotions he felt playing in the stadium for Northwest Missouri State. This game, though, Rodrick understands the intensity of what Williams will experience — such as hearing his name spoken by the public-address announcer or seeing his player profile on the Jumbotron — might be 10 times bigger than what he encountered.

Rodrick is not envious of the adoration his brother will receive from fans. Instead, he has wanted such a scenario to materialize for years.

"Not a lot of things in life can you say somebody deserves something," Rodrick said. "If it was anybody who deserved to run out of that tunnel as a Kansas City Chief in front of his friends and family, in his hometown, you couldn't find a better person than X."

The genesis of Patrick Mahomes' no-look pass and why it works

ESPN

December 11, 2018

KANSAS CITY, Mo. -- Patrick Mahomes' use of the no-look pass started innocently enough. He was fooling around with it in college at Texas Tech and eventually worked his way up to a competition with one of the backup quarterbacks.

Mahomes found out he was good at looking one way and getting the ball to a receiver in another direction. Suddenly the no-look pass became something more than just something to goof around with.

"I realized it was actually a tool I can use in games," he said.

It came in handy in the Kansas City Chiefs' 27-24 overtime win over the Baltimore Ravens on Sunday, when Mahomes looked to the middle of the field but threw to his left to wide receiver Demarcus Robinson for a 17-yard gain late in the second quarter.

The pass turned out to be a key play, as it moved the Chiefs to midfield with 1:30 left in the half, allowing them to eventually kick a field goal.

Mahomes wasn't showing off on the play. The no-look component was necessary. It got Baltimore safety Chuck Clark to pause just long enough for Robinson to get open.

"I was looking and I saw [Robinson] about to come open, and I needed to move the safety over to the right," Mahomes said. "I just kind of trusted [Robinson] was going to be there, and I put it out there and he made a great play on it."

Mahomes threw his first no-look pass in a game last year for the Chiefs against the Denver Broncos. He threw at least one earlier this season.

None have wound up in the hands of a defender.

"I haven't thrown an interception yet," Mahomes said. "Hopefully I won't. I tried to throw one earlier in the season, and I think one of the receivers -- it might have been Tyreek [Hill] -- stopped running because he was thinking I was going throw it back to the right. You just have to have that chemistry and know that he's going to keep running his route the same way."

Chiefs coach Andy Reid has seen a lot of passes during his long career, but even he marveled at Mahomes' accuracy on the no-look pass.

"It's one thing to do it in practice, and then you start throwing it in a game, and a game against the No. 1 defense in the National Football League, that's a little different."

Andy Reid on Patrick Mahomes:

"He's comfortable doing it," Reid said. "This is the NFL, and he's doing it. It's one thing to do it in practice, and then you start throwing it in a game, and a game against the No. 1 defense in the National Football League, that's a little different. You have to have tremendous confidence in what you're doing there.

"He's got a knack for that. He did a nice job with it. He actually froze [Clark] when you really look at it, and what effect it had on the defense. There was a guy right underneath the route. I would have liked to interview that guy right at that point. That's a tough bind. How do you go explain that to your coach when he's looking over here but he threw it over here? They're going to think you're crazy, right? But it worked."

The no-look pass, like some of the other unconventional throws Mahomes occasionally makes, can be a dangerous maneuver. Reid said he isn't going to stop Mahomes from doing it because the Chiefs would lose a lot of big plays if he did

"He's able to decipher the defense and kind of know where his guys are," Reid said. "You've got to put in the speed of the player and all those things. He's able to get that all spit and calculated out in his brain. He's got a knack for it.

"You heard this about Ted Williams, the baseball player, that he could read the stitches on the baseball. Certain guys have vision. They can see. [Mahomes] does have real good vision. ... I haven't seen a lot of guys do that. I was around [Brett] Favre, who did some amazing things that way and Donovan [McNabb] and those guys. But not quite like that."

December 11, 2018

In the afterglow of the locker room following the Chiefs' 27-24 overtime win over Baltimore on Sunday at Arrowhead Stadium, Patrick Mahomes couldn't resist razzing Tyreek Hill about, uh, failing to score on their mere 48-yard phenomenon on fourth and 9 that saved the game.

"I thought you were fast," he called out with a smile to Hill.

The flash who is likely the fastest player in the NFL laughed and said, "I'm not fast no more."

He is ridiculously so, of course. But he demonstrated anew how he is so much more than simply that with his eight-catch, 139-yard effort despite lugging two injuries that would have sidelined someone with less grit and resolve.

Anyone watching closely has known for a while now that Hill's speed is just one of his gifts. He also has incredible body control and agility, terrific hands and footwork, a keen grasp of the offense and the ability to track the deep ball that Mahomes says would make him "the best center fielder of all time."

In other words, all the ingredients to be a stellar wide receiver — not to mention a penchant for celebrations that make the whole package mesmerizing.

On Sunday, he made another dimension more obvious.

"If you had any doubts about Tyreek Hill ... just being a football player, today he put that doubt to rest," fellow Chiefs receiver Chris Conley said. "Because he played through some stuff today. He played through some hits today that would have taken a lot of people out of the game."

He later added, "He was definitely feeling it. He's just continued to amaze me, and I'm sure he's continued to amaze y'all."

On the receiving end of the play that provided further proof of why Mahomes should be the NFL MVP, Hill was limping with a heel injury that necessitated taping over his shoe at halftime.

The tape, he said with a straight face, was "just for the show, man. I like to look good when I play."

The wounded heel came after Hill earlier had been forced out of the game when, as he put it, he was "unfortunate enough to get my hand smashed between (the helmets of) two linebackers running full speed."

Each sent a shudder through Chiefs fans and limited Hill to playing 76 percent (65 snaps) of the Chiefs' offensive plays. But they didn't keep him from having the fortitude to be a force with the game on the line as the Chiefs rallied from down 24-17 to tie it in the final minute of regulation.

As Mahomes' pass came his way, Hill thought, "If I don't make this play, we lose."

He also had three catches for 39 yards in what proved to be the game-winning drive in overtime.

To hear Hill tell it, there was never a doubt he'd return to that game and, evidently, he will be ready to go for the AFC West showdown against the Los Angeles Chargers on Thursday at Arrowhead Stadium.

"You know what: I ain't hurt," he said Sunday. "I don't get hurt, man."

Let's hope he's right. Because a strong case can be made that after Mahomes no one offensive player is more crucial to the Super Bowl prospects of the Chiefs. (Getting Eric Berry back on defense obviously is another pivotal factor.)

The latest case in point was the play that helped save the game: That was something, as kicker Harrison Butker said, "only Patrick and Tyreek can do together."

Now, the Chiefs could ill-afford to be without star tight end Travis Kelce, either.

But part of the reason I wrote last week that Kareem Hunt was more luxury than necessity to their ambitions was Mahomes and Hill, who is at the core of so many of the dynamics.

(A footnote to that: In my Billy Joel-inspired response to one of the readers who disagreed about Hunt being a luxury, I said you may be right, I may be crazy. And in their two games since he was released, the Chiefs have scored 67 points and rushed for an average of 132.5 yards — 14 more than their season average. True proof awaits in the playoffs, of course.)

Hill's influence also extends to field position because the constant threat he could take a punt back inspires dread in opponents, who are so intent on kicking away from him that they often come up short. The Chargers paid for doing otherwise with Hill's tone-setting 91-yard return in the first minutes of the season opener.

Hunt was a tremendous player, and no doubt the Chiefs would be better with him. But I believe his absence can be covered in ways the Chiefs would struggle to make up for if they lost Hill, who has 74 catches for 1,258 yards.

"Just the attention that he gets from defenses; I mean, they have to game-plan for him, kind of like Kelce," Mahomes said. "It opens up everyone else, but then he's also still able to make plays and beat double teams or tight coverage. That's something that truly helps take our offense to the next level."

Because he's both catalyst and glue.

Asked about Hill's impact even without the ball, Chiefs coach Andy Reid said, "Well, he's fast and (defenders) are aware of that. Whether you're handing it to him, quick throws, deep throws, he can do all that stuff and do a lot of things for you.

"The thing that kind of gets put aside is he's a smart kid, innately a smart kid. This stuff, moving him all around like we do and all the motion and shifts and all the gizmos, he's really good at that. He has no problem learning it and you don't have to repeat it and repeat it and repeat it to him. He does a lot of things for us, and he does them well."

Yes, speed is where it starts. It's just not where it ends.

"He relies on his route-running now," Mahomes said. "And his speed is his extra hitch that he gets that takes him over the top."

Along with his toughness.

"My Momma always taught me not to be soft — you know what I'm saying?" he said. "No matter the circumstances."

(Travis Kelce & Patrick Mahomes)

Tony Gonzalez wishes he, like Travis Kelce, got to play with Patrick Mahomes

ESPN

December 27, 2018

KANSAS CITY, Mo. -- Tony Gonzalez spent the first 12 seasons of his NFL career with the Kansas City Chiefs, a career that will land him in the Pro Football Hall of Fame -- as soon as this winter. And yet he still wondered on a recent trip to Kansas City how much more he might have accomplished had he played with quarterback Patrick Mahomes.

"To be in an offense like this, in this day and age, with the rules the way they are, to play with a guy like Patrick Mahomes, you just salivate," the former Chiefs tight end said. "You're just, 'Man, I wish I could do that.' I'm that crusty old guy saying, 'You know what I would have done if I would have been in this offense?'"

Travis Kelce and not Gonzalez is the fortunate tight end who gets to play with Mahomes, at least at this early stage of the quarterback's career. Kelce has 98 catches for 1,274 yards and 10 touchdowns heading into Sunday's final regular-season game against the Oakland Raiders at Arrowhead Stadium.

Kelce had 12 receptions for 168 yards and two touchdowns in a game against the Raiders in early December. If he posts numbers close to that again Sunday, his season will easily eclipse the best of Gonzalez' 17-year career. Gonzalez had 102 catches for 1,258 yards and seven touchdowns in 2004 with the Chiefs.

Travis Kelce had 12 catches for 168 yards and two touchdowns in the Chiefs' first meeting with the Raiders this season. AP

Kelce would also have one of the best seasons ever for a tight end. He's 54 yards away from breaking Rob Gronkowski's single season record for yardage by a tight end.

Kelce had seasons of 80-plus catches and 1,000-plus yards in each of the last two seasons with Alex Smith at quarterback. But it's not a coincidence his career season is coming in Mahomes' first season as a starter.

"I've never seen a guy throw the ball like he does," Kelce said. "That's not taking away from any of the quarterbacks I've played with. When he's on the run, he's throwing no-look passes, throwing across the field to guys you wouldn't even think he's recognizing.

"Just being able to make plays when the plays need to be made, that's Patty Mahomes."

The two started forming a special on-field bond at training camp, when the ball went most often and for more big plays to Kelce and wide receiver Tyreek Hill.

"He's got a great relationship with the quarterback," coach Andy Reid said of Kelce. "Actions speak louder than words in that case. Patrick has a lot of trust in him. ... It all kind of stems from that. I watch them talk in practice. They're always talking about how they can maneuver a route and make it a little bit better."

Kelce's season got off to a slow start in Los Angeles, where the Chiefs beat the Chargers as Hill had a big game. Kelce had just one catch and 6 yards.

Kelce had the first of his five 100-yard games the next week against the Steelers in Pittsburgh. Kelce hasn't had fewer than five catches since the Chargers game.

"I felt like as training camp started going and we were around each other all day every day, we built that chemistry so I could throw balls early," Mahomes said. "He'll do stuff sometimes and I'll already know what he's going to do before the route's even ran and that's just the chemistry that you build when you're around each other that much.

"He stepped in since Day 1 and has been attacking every single day. He's been a guy who's had a lot of success in this league but he's never satisfied."

Kelce's big season with Mahomes is as much about the quarterback's ability to extend plays and make unconventional throws, like those across his body and back to the middle of the field while moving toward one sideline or the other.

Kelce is frequently on the receiving end of these passes. He's good not at just adjusting his route as necessary but finding holes in the defense when he does.

"He's pretty creative and doesn't really run the lines like a lot of people do," tight ends coach Tom Melvin said. "Pat's a little bit creative himself. The two of them together ... if the play breaks down and [Mahomes] has got to move a little bit in the pocket, now it comes to, 'Where's the void?' You've got to have a feel for that, to know where to go and how things are coveragewise, where [defenders] are going to go, who they're dropping, where the void is going to be.

"Travis is getting himself to where he needs to be, and Pat has a great knack for throwing people open. They're not necessarily open when the ball leaves his hand. ... The play is never over when Pat still has the ball in his hand."

It's a situation that has Gonzalez, the NFL's all-time tight end leader for catches and yards, envious. But he also recognizes the talent of his successor as the next great Chiefs tight end.

"A phenomenal athlete, an unbelievable talent," Gonzalez said of Kelce. "And he's doing what he's supposed to be doing. He's setting records. ... Records are made to be broken. I got to break them, and now it's up to somebody else."

(Damien Williams)

Damien Williams' literal explanation of what led to his Chiefs contract extension: 'I took the opportunity, and I ran with it'

Nate Taylor

The Athletic

December 28, 2018

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — One of the last Chiefs to enter the team's locker room after Friday's practice, the final workout of the regular season, was veteran running back Damien Williams. In Williams' right hand was his smartphone, which was just inches from his mouth. With the conversation on speaker-phone mode, Williams smiled as he talked to a friend about the exciting news in life.

Several family members, friends and teammates reached out to Williams just hours after he signed a two-year contract extension with the Chiefs on Thursday night that fully promoted him as the team's newest starter at the position. Williams, whose base salary this season is $790,000, could earn up to $8.1 million in the next two years if he accomplishes all the incentives in the new deal, according to league sources.

In the past three games, Williams has provided quality production in replacing Spencer Ware, who has missed the last two games with a strained right hamstring. Williams has recorded more than 100 all-purpose yards in the past two games and finished Sunday's game against the Seahawks with 140 combined yards and a touchdown. When Williams finalized the terms of his extension, he said he was grateful for the Chiefs' faith in him instead of being surprised that a deal could be finished before he was scheduled to become a free agent after this season.

"I'm here every day with these guys, so they see how hard I come to work every day and the things I'm doing off the field to prepare myself on the field," Williams said. "It means a lot. They took a shot on me this year coming off an injury. A lot of teams shied away from me. They didn't shy away from me. They're showing me they're not shying away from anything that I'm continuing to do."

A month ago, Williams was the Chiefs' third running back on the depth chart. He was the backup for Ware, a reliable player who played on third downs, and Kareem Hunt, the second-year player who led the NFL in rushing yards last season as a rookie. The Chiefs' season was altered Nov. 30, the day that TMZ Sports posted a video of Hunt shoving and kicking a woman in a hallway of a downtown Cleveland hotel on the morning of Feb. 10. The Chiefs released Hunt just hours after the video was posted and said in a statement that their former star was not truthful previously about the incident.

Williams played more snaps in the team's first game without Hunt, the road victory over the Raiders. But Williams began fully showing his abilities the following week against the Ravens, who entered the game as the league's best defense. Ware sustained his injury in the fourth quarter, and Williams was a vital member in the Chiefs' comeback victory in overtime. Williams' biggest play resulted in him catching and scoring the game-tying touchdown pass from quarterback Patrick Mahomes in the final minute of regulation.

"You don't get to (always) play with a guy like Pat," Williams said. "He's great, and you know everything he does. Then, there's everybody around him. I feel like (receiver) Tyreek (Hill) and the (offensive) line and everybody makes it great being here because you can have fun."

Williams has also fit well in coach Andy Reid's offense.

With his increase in touches, Williams has displayed the skill set that has made him dynamic and versatile. He is faster than Ware, who returned to the team this season after having surgery to repair the torn PCL and damaged other parts of his right knee. Yet Williams is also strong enough to run over defenders, which he did against Chargers rookie safety Derwin James, although the play was negated by an illegal shift penalty.

"I knew he had this in him ever since training camp," Mahomes said of Williams after Sunday's loss to the Seahawks. "You could see the talent. You could see the ability to catch out of the backfield but at the same time run in between the tackles. He's stepped up these last few weeks."

When training camp began, Williams expected to earn his roster spot, perhaps as the last backup at the position, by outperforming two players who have the same last name as him in Kerwynn and Darrel, the undrafted rookie who also made the team's 53-man roster. But a hamstring strain to Hunt, a concussion to Charcandrick West and Ware's slow return from his surgery allowed Williams to get plenty of snaps with the first-team offense. Even in August, the Chiefs surprisingly learned how fast Williams built chemistry with Mahomes.

Perhaps Williams' best value to Reid is his ability to catch the ball out of the backfield. Against the Chargers and Seahawks, Williams has shown his soft hands, vision and elusiveness when having the ball in open space.

He added an element of toughness against the Seahawks despite fumbling the ball away in the second quarter. In 13 carries, Williams gained 103 rushing yards, the most of his career.

"I had an opportunity unfold in front of me," he said. "I took the opportunity, and I ran with it. This is something I've been preparing myself since my rookie year."

General manager Brett Veach, according to a source, began extension talks with Williams and his agent after the Chiefs' win over the Ravens.

Throughout this season, Reid has appreciated Williams' attitude and his willingness to do whatever the team needed to win. Williams spent most of the season as a contributor on special teams, which included him blocking a punt in the victory over the Browns that led to an easy touchdown for the Chiefs offense. Reid said Williams' energy and determination were needed after the players realized their season would continue without Hunt. Reid praised Williams for the way he has worked, even after the fumble against the Seahawks, his biggest mistake of the season.

"Damien has really done a nice job for us, and he was rewarded for that with a nice contract that allows him to be on our football team for a little bit," Reid said. "I'm happy for him because he's earned it. He's played special teams and excelled on special teams. When he was given an opportunity to play the running back position, he's done a nice job with that."

The first person whom Williams called Thursday night after signing his contract extension was Virleana Alexander, his mother. Alexander, after learning of her son's latest accomplishment, screamed joyfully into her smartphone. The celebration made Williams smile in the moment and after Friday's practice, when he told the story to reporters.

"It's a good feeling being able to make my family happy," Williams said. He added of his mother: "She's came out here, and she says she loves it. She wants to come back. That's really why I did what I did to do this (deal) right now. My family, they love it out here and they see I love it out here. So, why not get it done with?"

Serenaded by MVP chants, Patrick Mahomes caps historic season by reaching rarefied milestone

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — His coronation began during Sunday's game and the loud praise continued even after the Chiefs' regular season ended. Quarterback Patrick Mahomes, the first-time starter who is the favorite to win the NFL's most prestigious individual award, left the field inside Arrowhead Stadium to cheers and chants.

As he exited the field, walking toward the Chiefs' tunnel, Mahomes lifted his arms toward the stands. He thanked the fans who watched his latest stellar performance in the Chiefs' dominant 35-3 win over the rival Raiders. When Mahomes spoke, he shouted that he expected to see the same fans again Jan. 12 for the team's upcoming playoff game, in the divisional round against the AFC's lowest remaining seed.

After a brief celebration with his teammates, Mahomes, wearing a commemorative red T-shirt and gray ball cap for the Chiefs' third consecutive AFC West division title, left the locker room and was welcomed by a large group of fans. One fan, in the midst of loud cheers, began a familiar chant. Within seconds, everyone in the bar across from the locker room joined the repetitive chorus.

"M-V-P! M-V-P! M-V-P!"

"It's special — this place, this community and this team," Mahomes said of being at the center of the fans' adoration. "For me, it's awesome to be a part of it. It's all about playing for my teammates and this community. That's the biggest thing. No matter what happens on the outside, it's that they know that every single time I step on that field, I give it everything I have."

For 16 games, Mahomes played the role of superstar on a roster full of veterans who had never before clinched the top seed and home-field advantage in the AFC playoffs. Mahomes led thrilling comeback victories, produced unique highlights and often bailed out one of the league's most beleaguered defenses.

With two touchdown passes Sunday, Mahomes capped a feat that only two legendary quarterbacks have accomplished, joining sure-fire first-ballot Hall of Famers Tom Brady and Peyton Manning as the only quarterbacks to throw 50 or more touchdown passes in a single season.

Mahomes also bolstered his candidacy for the MVP award by leading the Chiefs to a 12-4 record while passing for 5,097 yards on 8.8 yards per attempt, with just 14 turnovers.

"It's a credit to my teammates," Mahomes said. "My offensive line kept me upright all season long, and guys were making plays on short passes that were scoring touchdowns. It's a combination of all of that, with Coach (Andy) Reid calling these great plays."

Mahomes' first touchdown Sunday was a good sign for an offense that had struggled to have explosive plays in recent losses to the Chargers and Seahawks. On the Chiefs' opening drive, Mahomes connected with receiver Tyreek Hill, who had played through a sore right heel injury the last three games, for a 67-yard touchdown pass. Hill, the NFL's fastest player when healthy, sprinted past rookie cornerback Nick Nelson into the end zone.

With the reception, Hill broke Derrick Alexander's Chiefs record for most receiving yards in a single season. Alexander recorded 1,391 yards during the 2000 season. Hill finished his season with 1,479 yards and 14 touchdowns, and he made an announcement after Sunday's game that should excite his teammates.

"I'm back healthy, baby," Hill said while smiling. "I'm good. The cheetah is back. I'm good now."

A few feet from Hill in the locker room, center Mitch Morse explained how he appreciated Mahomes' moxie throughout the season. Inside the offense's huddle, Morse said Mahomes' confidence resonated with his teammates.

No play Sunday better illustrated Morse's point more than Mahomes' second touchdown pass. In the conventional sense, the Raiders did everything well prior to the play. Johnny Townsend, the Raiders' punter, executed a perfect punt in the third quarter that forced the Chiefs to start their drive at their own 1-yard line. Four plays later, the Chiefs faced a 3rd-and-10 play from their own 11-yard line. Mahomes, in trying to locate an open receiver, moved up in the pocket and unleashed a long, accurate 45-yard pass to receiver Demarcus Robinson that went for an 89-yard touchdown.

"The play was designed for Tyreek," Mahomes said. "They may have even triple-covered him. Demarcus was supposed to run a stop route, but he beat (his defender) so well off the line that he kept running. He threw the hand up. I just put it out there. He made a great play and scored on it."

Robinson celebrated Mahomes' 50th touchdown by spinning the ball into the ground. Mahomes ran the length of the field and executed jumping high-fives to right guard Andrew Wylie, left guard Jeff Allen and left tackle Eric Fisher. When Mahomes reached the end zone, he made sure to scoop up the ball as a keepsake. The only other ball Mahomes has kept this year was the one he used on the first passing touchdown of his career in the season-opening win over the Chargers.

"They're special," Mahomes said of his small collection. "I'll definitely keep that one (from Sunday), but hopefully I can get a few more."

Once Mahomes reached the bench and the Chiefs displayed Mahomes' statistical accomplishment on the jumbotron, he and his teammates heard most of the 77,500 fans voice their MVP chant.

"He's a special individual," tight end Travis Kelce said of Mahomes. "It sure has been a pleasure to play with him and witness the greatness he's been able to put out there on the field.

Mahomes rested in the final 10 minutes of the game and tried his best to not show much emotion during the fans' chants. He instead jumped and pumped his right fist and hugged Kelce when, for a few minutes, his teammate held the NFL record for receiving yards by a tight end in a single season with 1,336. (The 49ers' George Kittle surpassed Kelce with 1,377.) The Patriots' Rob Gronkowski previously held the record, amassing 1,327 receiving yards in 2011.

"I'm ecstatic to finally get home-field advantage for the playoffs and bring everyone to Arrowhead," Kelce said in deflecting his individual feat. "That's what these fans deserve. We'll make sure we give these fans and this city everything we've got. We're not done. We knocked another goal off the list, but at the same time we have our eyes set on something way bigger than this."

Outside linebacker Justin Houston echoed a similar message during his postgame news conference. Houston stressed that the Chiefs shouldn't let their past postseason failures — which include six consecutive home playoff losses — poison their future next month. As an eight-year veteran, Houston knows one of the biggest reasons the Chiefs should be optimistic this postseason is because they have Mahomes. Houston acknowledged that Mahomes was the first player to ever receive MVP chants during a game in his career.

A few minutes later, as Houston answered a reporter's question, Mahomes began leaving the stadium with his family. Houston, and everyone else in the news conference room near the locker room, heard the chorus that followed Mahomes.

"M-V-P! M-V-P! M-V-P!"

Veteran Justin Houston energizes Chiefs with postgame speech heading into playoffs

After handing out game balls Sunday night, Andy Reid ceded the floor to Justin Houston.

The hulking eight-year veteran linebacker stepped into a small clearing amid the mass of his huddled teammates following the Chiefs' regular-season-ending win over the Raiders.

"Every time, all the time you got, dog, please put it in this dog," he growled, his low, velvety voice dripping with intensity.

"We've only got three weeks to give it all we got. That's all brother. You've got the rest of the offseason to do whatever you want, brother. You've got three weeks to give it all you've got. All your time dedicated to this. Let's go get this thing, dog. Let's go get this."

The team put their hands together and broke the huddle after a quick count.

But days after Houston's impromptu speech, the Chiefs are still buzzing with the energy he infused in the locker room that night. It's an energy they know they have to carry through the bye week and into the playoffs to break the franchise's postseason curse.

"He's just been that voice that you sort of need to hear at times," fellow linebacker Dee Ford said. "That's just the makeup of our team. He's done a phenomenal job of leading us."

Though he's missed time this season because of injury, Houston has remained one of the defensive leaders of the team along with safety Eric Berry. Houston's message to his teammates was simple: shelve your personal needs for a few more weeks to help the team achieve its major goal.

After the first-round bye, the Chiefs will have a maximum of three games in four weeks.

"This is a month right now of your life that you don't get back, this opportunity," Ford said. "You don't want to waste it. We're locking in. Take your game ... whatever you do, magnify it even more. You've got three weeks. You can do anything for three weeks. We don't want to take, we want to take advantage, but we don't want to take for granted where we are right now."

Where the Chiefs are right now is the No. 1 seed in the AFC with homefield advantage through the playoffs — at least, of course, until a potential trip to Atlanta for the Super Bowl. They'll know their opponent after this weekend's games, but it will be the Colts, Ravens or Chargers. Kansas City's failings in the playoffs have been well-documented, but in Houston's words, "don't let the past poison your future."

"We are focused on the future now and we are getting ready for whoever we have to play," he said after Sunday's win. "We are going to take advantage of this opportunity."

In just his second year with the Chiefs, quarterback Patrick Mahomes feels the urgency around the club and understands the necessity for the tone set by Houston in his postgame speech.

"You feel that in the locker room," Mahomes said. "You feel that from the leaders on this team is that we know it's going to take full effort the whole entire way. You can't be satisfied with just being here.

"We want to capitalize on the opportunity to be here and capitalize on the No. 1 seed. We're excited for the opportunity. We really are. Everybody's pumped up and we're ready to go."
